Supreme Court Backs Fine of $1,400,000 On UMW for Contempt

Lewis Plea Rejected By Vote of 5 to 3; Constitutionality of Taft Act Left Open

By Chalmers M. Roberts
Post Reporter

John L. Lewis and his United Mine Workers must pay the $1,400,000 contempt-of-court fines growing out of the 1948 coal strike.

This was the result of a Supreme Court ruling yesterday, which gave the first inkling of the court's line-up since the appointment of two new justices.

The court refused, 5 to 3, to consider Lewis' appeal, based on the grounds that the Taft-Hartley labor law is unconstitutional. The five were Chief Justice Vinson and Justices Frankfurter, Jackson, Burton and Minton. Voting to hear Lewis' case at least were Justices Black, Reed and Douglas. Justice Clark, who was Attorney General when the case was prosecuted, took no part in the ruling.

Minton and Clark replaced the late Justices Murphy and Rutledge. The previous court's so-called "liberal bloc" had consisted of Justices Black, Douglas, Murphy and Rutledge, joined on occasion by Justice Reed and others.

The ruling leaves for possible later determination any constitutionality issue in the Taft-Hartley law. Lewis was fined after he ignored an order by District Court Judge T. Alan Goldsborough to end the 1948 walkout—Lewis would never admit it was a "strike" and called it a "voluntary cessation of work." The injunction was issued under the Taft-Hartley law. A year earlier Lewis and the union had been fined half as much on similar charges in another strike.

In Chicago, Lewis had only a "no comment" on the court's latest ruling.

The Supreme Court also refused to consider an attack by three of the railroad unions on another injunction. That was the 1948 injunction brought under equity—general legal rules—rather than the Taft-Hartley law which does not apply to rail workers.

Constitutionality Contested

The unions went to court to contest the injunction's constitutionality, even though the strike was over and the railroads subsequently returned to the private owners by the Government which had seized them.

UMW Fine To Give D. C. $840,000

The District will be richer by $840,000 as a result of yesterday's Supreme Court ruling upholding the $1,400,000 fine against John L. Lewis' United Mine Workers Union.

Barring a rehearing, an unlikely procedure, the District will have paid into its account in the Treasury 60 per cent of the fine. The $840,000 would be more than the cost of a 24-room elementary school, officials calculate.

When Lewis and the union were fined half that amount in 1947, the District received $447,000. The amount included part of some fees involved in that case. The law requires the District to pay 60 percent of the cost of Federal courts here. In return it gets 60 percent of fines and other penalties levied by the courts.

Sixty percent of the Lewis fine will go into the miscellaneous revenues of the District general fund, like general taxes, while the remaining 40 percent will go to the United States Treasury, District Auditor Arthur R. Pilkerton said.

The District's share will be available for any purpose except those of the water and highway funds.

Dennis Case Raises 2-Hour Argument On Jury Service of Federal Workers

Can a Government employe, who must be cleared under the Administration's loyalty program, give a fair verdict as a juror when the defendant is an official of the Communist Party?

The Supreme Court wrestled with that one yesterday for a couple of hours. It will announce a decision weeks—or months—hence.

The case is that of Eugene Dennis, secretary of the party and one of those convicted in the recent New York Communist trials. In 1947 he was cited in contempt for refusing to answer a subpena of the House Un-American Activities Committee and later was convicted in District Court here and sentenced to a year in jail and $1000 fine.

Many Questions Asked

The justices asked so many questions of Solicitor General Philip B. Perlman that he never really finished his argument. Perlman contended the only question was whether Government employes could sit on any jury here.

A year ago the court, in a 5-to-4 decision, ruled that such Federal workers were not barred just because they worked for Uncle Sam. But the loyalty angle did not figure in that case.

Justice Jackson, who wrote a strong dissent in that case, yesterday said he considered the Dennis case "political" and indicated he is still very much opposed to juries with Government workers.

Justice Black, who last year voted with the majority, said "this case is about the loyalty program" and sharply questioned Perlman.

Clark Indicates He'll Vote

Justice Clark was on the bench during the argument and indicated he would vote in the case although he was Attorney General when it was brought. He pointed out to Dennis' lawyer that United States attorneys bring the cases under law.

But said the lawyer, George W. Crockett, jr., this is "under the over-all supervision of the Attorney General." Crockett was one of the lawyers in the New York case sentenced to jail for contempt of court. He was most mild-mannered yesterday.

Crockett declared all Government employes have an "ideological fear" of the loyalty program. Clark asked if he had any evidence of this and Crockett said each Federal worker juror, on questioning, admitted he was subject to the loyalty program.

Justice Frankfurter, one of the majority a year ago, declared that if any Government employe "feared" the result on his loyalty status of his vote on a jury he certainly would not admit it in open court.

$352,834,720 GM Dividends Set Record

400,000 Stockholders Will Receive $4.25 A Share on Common

New York, Nov. 7 (U.P.)—General Motors Corp., world's largest automobile producer, today boosted its 1949 dividends to the all time record of $352,834,720.

The 400,000 shareholders of the 44,104,340 shares will receive that amount when today's declaration of $4.25 a share is paid December 10 to stockholders of record November 17. Today's dividend, a "year-end payment," amounted to $187,443,445, not far under the $198,469,530 distributed in all of 1948.

Directors today also voted to retire on December 1 the entire outstanding issue of 125 million dollars of long-term notes. This, with 1949 dividend disbursements, will amount to $477,834,720.

Directors declared the regular quarterly dividends on the company's two preferred stock issues, to be paid February 1, 1950.

In the first three quarters of 1949, General Motors sold 2,167,512 cars and trucks for $4,458,079,580 and earned a net income of $502,414,029, highest total ever reported by any corporation. That equaled $11.21 a share on the common after payment of preferred dividends.

Dividends this year amount to $8 a share, against $4.50 in 1948. Back in 1926, the company paid $16 a share on common stock, but shares outstanding were far under the current total.

The latest payment brings the wages of stockholders into line with other groups, top officials explained today.

5 Countries Sign Social Security Pact

Paris, Nov. 7 (AP).—The five Brussels pact countries signed an agreement today guaranteeing social security payments to workers who move from one country to another.

The five countries — Britain, France, Belgium, The Netherlands and Luxembourg—specified in the agreement that old age pensions and other welfare schemes, in addition to worker's benefits, would be respected regardless of national boundaries.

Feed Him First, Then Chat, Church Advises Brides

London, Nov. 7 (U.P.).—The Church of England today advised young wives to feed their husbands when they come home before talking over the day's events.

The suggestion was contained in a revised version of a booklet handed to some 250,000 newlyweds the past 17 years. It is entitled "The Threshold of Marriage."

"A man has smaller reserves of energy than a woman," it said. "She can miss a meal or a proper night's rest with less discomfort than he.

"If a wife finds that her husband—when he comes home from work—does not take a keen interest in household affairs until he has had a square meal, that is not because he is greedy or merely pig-headed. Feed him before you tell him all about the day's events."

Addresses Italians

Pope Advises Catholic Judges To Be Cautious About Divorce

Rome, Nov. 7 (AP). — Catholic judges throughout the world have been told by Pope Pius XII to beware of granting divorces which would break up marriages "valid before God and the church."

The pontiff referred to his remarks, made to a group of Italian Catholic jurists yesterday, as a statement of "fundamental norms." Thus, legal sources said, the Pope meant his words to be taken as guidance, rather than as Roman Catholic law.

Competent observers said that, whether Catholic judges were considering Protestant or Catholic marriages, the Pope's words would carry the same moral force. These sources said that the Catholic Church, while it ruled that Catholics must be married in their faith, considers marriages of non-Catholics valid when performed in other faiths.

(In New York, Robert Granville Burke, president of the Guild of Catholic Judges, said the Pope's address presented a matter for churchmen, not for laymen, to interpret. The guild has members throughout the United States.)

The Pope's remarks were made public today. He cautioned Catholic jurists that they have grave responsibility in the application of laws which prove contrary to Christian concepts.

This may have been directed particularly at strengthening the will of Catholics who still are active in the law in Communist-controlled countries such as Czechoslovakia, where the government has just promulgated church control legislation.

Acheson Off For German Talk in Paris

Secretary Departs For Brief Big 3 Parley Following Hoffman Interview

By Ferdinand Kuhn
Post Reporter

Against a background of minor interallied squabbles over Germany, Secretary Acheson took off for Paris last night for a hurriedly-arranged meeting with Foreign Secretary Bevin and Foreign Minister Schuman of France.

The omens for the meeting were not good, and there was a good deal of mystery about why it had to be held at this time. Bevin had called for it at short notice, and with little time for preparation, to discuss the end of all plant dismantling in Germany, among other things.

The French cannot commit themselves on this or any German decision until after next week's debate in their National Assembly. Acheson himself can stay for only two or possibly three days before he must hurry home to welcome the Shah of Iran next week.

This suggests that most of the decisions in Paris will have to be tentative and will have to be left for further study by experts of the three governments.

Takeoff Delayed

In place of the usual clockwork arrangements on such occasions, Acheson's takeoff was delayed two hours by engine trouble in the airliner the State Department had chartered for his journey. A substitute plane, a 60-passenger Strato-cruiser, finally took the impatient secretary and 11 aides, on their way.

Before leaving the State Department, Acheson had five important visitors. One was Foreign Minister Andrei Vishinsky of Russia, who stayed for only 14 minutes on what he told reporters was a courtesy call.

Three other visitors came in a group—the Washington envoys of Belgium, the Netherlands and Luxembourg. According to Baron Silvercruys, the Belgian Ambassador, they "underlined" the importance their governments attach to the Paris meeting of the three Foreign Ministers.

Hoffman Calls

Acheson's fifth visitor, Economic Cooperation Administrator Paul G. Hoffman, was a more important one in the light of the Secretary's impending takeoff for Europe. For Hoffman returned only Sunday from a visit to Europe in which he had urged quicker economic integration among the nations of Western Europe, including Western Germany.

He was able to give Acheson a first-hand account of the present attitude of European leaders, including Bevin and Schuman, to one of the problems uppermost in American thinking at the moment—namely, the removal of trade and currency barriers within Western Europe, and between Western Germany and her neighbors.

Later, at a press conference, Hoffman gave reporters some of his impressions, and said he had also given them to Acheson. These, in brief, were a few of them:

CIO Leader Orders All Hands Back

40,000 Affected; Agreement Has Same Terms as At Bethlehem

By Sam Stavisky
Post Reporter

Jones & Laughlin Steel Corp. early today announced signing of a strike-ending agreement with the CIO United Steelworkers.

The announcement, issued at Pittsburgh, was accompanied by one from Philip Murray, union president, that the 40,000 employes of the company had been ordered to return to work at once.

The agreement contains the same terms as that signed last week by Bethlehem Steel Corporation and the union.

Meanwhile, John L. Lewis charged that he could work out a coal peace formula with the Illinois operators but was balked from doing so by a single company "closely allied" with the steel industry.

The president of the United Mine Workers, meeting with his 200-man policy committee in Chicago, told a press conference he still hoped to break the operators' strike front with a separate peace in Illinois.

Adlai Stevenson, Governor of Illinois, has asked operators and the union for a quick end to the strike—begun over the Nation September 19 and continued since then by some 400,000 soft coal miners—because of the lack of fuel in the State at a time when the weather was severe. Lewis agreed to meet with the Illinois operators, but they publicly rejected the offer on the ground that they were committed to the joint action of the National Bituminous Wage Conference.

Lewis said he and the union policy committee had reached no conclusions at their own conference but would meet again today.

Lewis asserted that George B. Harrington, president of the Chicago, Wilmington and Franklin County Coal Co. was by himself blocking the union's efforts to win a separate settlement in Illinois.

This coal company, Lewis said, is owned by Stone & Webster of Boston, an engineering and construction company, which Lewis charged is an "investment trust" "closely allied" with the steel industry.

Stone & Webster is "anxious to have its privately owned coal mines conform in policy with steel," Lewis maintained.

In Washington, Cyrus S. Ching, chief Federal conciliator, conferred for three hours yesterday with representatives of the Southern Coal Producers Association, and afterward told reporters: "The situation looks the same."

The indefatiguable Ching plans to hold a separate meeting today with Harry Moses, president of H. C. Frick Coke Co., the largest coal subsidiary of U. S. Steel Corp. and spokesman for the "captive" mines—those owned and operated by the steel mills. On Wednesday, the director of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service will meet here with George Love, president of Pittsburgh Consolidation Coal Co., who heads the Northern and Western operators.

In the meantime, Ching expects

200,000 Vote Expected In Virginia; Poll Tax Amendments on Ballot

30,000 to Decide Local Contests in Area, Alexandria's Nonpartisan Issue

An estimated 200,000 Virginians will go to the polls today, chiefly concerned with a proposed change in their voting laws and the choice of a new Governor.

Among them will be some 30,000 northern Virginians who will have several local contests for office to consider on their ballot.

Polls Close at 6 P. M.

Polls will be open from 6 a. m. to 6 p. m.

Practically all the fireworks during the campaign since the August dual primary have resulted from discussion of the Campbell amendments, which would abolish the poll tax as a prerequisite to voting and permit other suffrage changes.

The three-way contest for Governor has been tame. John S. Battle, of Charlottesville, who has the support of the dominant conservative Democratic organization and Senator Harry F. Byrd, is regarded as an easy winner.

His opponents are Walter Johnson, Northumberland County commonwealth's attorney, Republican, and Clarke T. Robb, of Herndon, Social Democrat.

Lieut. Gov. L. Preston Collins, of Marion, Democrat, is opposed by Republican E. Thomas McGuire. Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond, jr., has no Republican opponent but Sidney Moore, of Portsmouth, a Social-Democrat, is running against him.

Heated Discussion

The suffrage amendments, which have been the subject of heated discussion on both sides, are expected to bring out the voters in large numbers. Four years ago, in the election in which William M. Tuck was victor for Governor, approximately 168,000 votes were cast.

As the campaign closed it was apparent that opponents of the suffrage amendments felt the proposal would be defeated.

A similar sentiment was evident among some of the amendments' supporters, who felt that the necessary spade work had been "too little and too late."

Among those who have issued statements in favor of adoption of the franchise changes are Senators Byrd, Governor Tuck, Battle, Attorney General Almond and Lieutenant Governor Collins.

Some of the opponents of the proposal say they will seek an early constitutional convention for what they think will be a better

Lehman and Dulles Go to Wire In New York Race for Senate

Odds appear to favor New York's former governor

By Robert C. Albright
Post Reporter

New York's hot-foot race for the Senate, billed as a straight-out test of the Truman "Fair Deal," goes to the wire today.

Stealing the play from scattered elections across the country, New York's eligible voters, 6,300,000 strong, will choose between these two men:

Seventy-one-year-old former Governor Herbert H. Lehman, who accepted the "welfare state" as an issue because he said he headed one. He calls his opponent a "bigot."

Sixty-one-year-old Senator John Foster Dulles, GOP foreign relations expert, who says the issue is the "all powerful state." He calls his opponent a "liar."

The odds appeared to favor Lehman but name-calling and hidden religious and other issues have muddied the track.

Because of its bearing on the 1950 congressional campaign, and

2 Gambling Case Witnesses Warned of Contempt Action

By Benjamin C. Bradlee
Post Reporter

Two government witnesses were threatened with contempt citations by District Court Judge Matthew F. McGuire yesterday in a stormy session during the gambling trial of William "Snags" Lewis and 13 others.

Murray J. Olf, owner of State Wide Sports News Distributors, and Mrs. Sadie Stanton, owner of a bungalow at 4310 46th ave., Bladensburg, Md., which the Government says served as Lewis' headquarters, both drew strong warnings from Judge McGuire.

Olf repeatedly refused to divulge the identify of the person who had asked him to request Western Union to install a sports results ticker in the Stanton home, after Judge McGuire had ordered him to answer the question. When Olf continued to refuse, Judge McGuire turned to him and said "I'll deal with you later," and ordered the trial to continue. No action, however, was taken against Olf.

When Mrs. Stanton took the stand she declined to say whether she knew Lewis in answer to a question by Prosecutor William Hitz. Ordered to answer the question by Judge McGuire, she stood on her refusal. Finally, after Judge McGuire said that she would be held in contempt of court, she replied that she did know him.

Early in the morning session, Defense Counsel Myron G. Ehrlich asked Judge McGuire to declare a mistrial. The judge had warned Ehrlich, who, with Charles E. Ford, represents all the defendants except Lewis, that only one defense attorney could object. The judge

Miami Gaming Industry Put At $100 Million

Miami, Fla., Nov. 7 (U.P.).—Greater Miami is becoming the headquarters for the Nation's leading criminals while local law enforcement officers shut their eyes to a 100-million-dollar illegal gambling industry, the Dade County grand jury reported today.

The findings were based on a six-month study begun last May when Circuit Judge Stanley Milledge charged that 25 million dollars a year is being paid by gamblers in "ice" money for police and political protection.

"Law enforcement . . . is confronted with the most insidious form of gambling—namely bookmaking," the jury said.

Bookmaking in Dade County has been sharply curtailed chiefly because of a reported "war" between two factions of gamblers, said to be "locals" and out-of-town mobs directed from New York and Chicago.

"A large number of individuals of unsavory reputation are making Dade County their present headquarters," the jury said. "These persons are criminals of national stature."

"We feel the Federal Government would find it a very profitable field to investigate these people regarding the sources of their income."

Barkley Receives A Surprise: He's Grandad of Year

Chicago, Nov. 7 (AP).—Vice President Barkley, who could claim to be the bridegroom of the year, learned today that he is officially the grandfather of the year.

He accepted a plaque with some surprise but unruffled good nature from representatives of the National Federation of Grandmothers' Clubs.

Barkley has seven grandchildren, five boys and two girls.

Barkley, 71, came to Chicago to talk oil with members of the American Petroleum Institute, but the subject of his coming marriage November 18 to Mrs. Carleton Hadley of St. Louis kept popping up.

He said he had just visited his 38-year-old bride-to-be in a St. Louis hospital where she is confined with the flu.

"She's feeling better, but she'll be in the hospital for several days," he told a news conference.

In a two-sentence announcement yesterday the Washington Redskins said the five-year contract of John (Billick) Whelchel, their head coach since February, had been "canceled by mutual agreement."

Whelchel's job was taken over by Herman Ball, line coach, on a temporary basis.

Partners Indicted on 6 Counts In $217,806 Tax Evasion Case

Franklin McKenzie Davison, 4404 Volta pl. nw., Washington, and William Jennings Hardy of Ravenwood, Falls Church, were indicted last night in Norfolk, Va., on six counts of income tax evasion, totaling $217,806.

The grand jury of the District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia acted at 6 p. m. after receiving prosecution presentments.

The bill of indictment charged the men with "willfully and knowingly" assisting in the preparation of false returns on behalf of the Arlington Asphalt Co. in the years 1943-1946, inclusive, and the Arlington Stone Co. at Leesburg in 1945 and 1946. The men are partners in both firms.

The asphalt firm has an office at Telegraph rd., Alexandria, and two others at 1756 North Ridge rd., and Key blvd. and Fort Myer dr., both in Arlington.

Indications were that the trial will be held next spring in Richmond, where the tax returns were filed, unless the defendants ask for a change.

(Drew Pearson in a column published in The Washington Post October 21, revealed that the two men were under investigation by tax officials.)

Reached at home, both defendants had no comment on the indictments, but their attorney, William A. Clineburg, said he was "very much surprised" since "we have been in constant touch with

U. N. Cancels Aid to Youth In Hungary

Lake Success, Nov. 7 (AP).—The United Nations has decided to stop sending aid to Hungarian children. The U. N. children's fund had allocated $800,000 for relief of needy children in that Soviet satellite state.

The executive board of the fund said today it had canceled the appropriation because Hungary demanded the right to spend the money as she pleased without supervision.

Hungary lowered the iron curtain on the U. N. relief mission last June when it declared the group was no longer necessary. At the same time, the Communist-dominated government asked the U. N. to keep the money coming, but to let them do the spending.

Stassen Assails Truman Attacks On Adversaries

Minneapolis, Nov. 7 (U.P.).—Harold E. Stassen today accused President Truman of making "vicious and untrue" statements in his attacks on political adversaries.

He charged that Mr. Truman used historical references in his recent St. Paul speech to "wrap the cloak of Jefferson around himself," but that actually the President "long ago personally trampled on the cloak of Jefferson."

Stassen, former Minnesota Governor and now president of the University of Pennsylvania, addressed a State GOP "kickoff" meeting for the 1950 campaign.

Stassen praised Congress for refusing to go along with Mr. Truman on the "dangerous" Brannan farm plan, on the President's request for postwar retention of OPA, and on his "demands for pyramided centralized power over a wide range of subjects."

Revolt Breaks Out At Paris Assembly

Paris, Nov. 7 (AP).—A full-scale revolt broke out tonight among members of the European Consultative Assembly against limitations placed on their work by the foreign ministers committee, upper house of the European council.

France's Paul Reynaud was reported to have declared that if this continues. He and many others will bolt the assembly.

Reynaud attacked the ministers for referring asembly resolutions on economic matters to the Marshall Plan's European Economic Cooperation Organization (OEEC).

Warsaw, Poland, Nov. 7 (AP).—Soviet Marshal Konstantin Rokossovsky took over his new jobs as Polish minister of defense and marshal of the Polish armies today with promises to strengthen defenses.

The tall, handsome hero of the 1945 liberation of Warsaw issued his first order of the day as chief of "our army." The Polish government prepared to ask Parliament for an amendment to the constitution that will allow him to take his place on the state council.

The amendment will permit Rokossovsky to exercise a hand in government affairs in peace time.

Allowed to Resign

An official announcement said Polish defense minister, Marshal Michal Roga-Zymierski, had been allowed to resign by President Boleslaw Bierut to take over "new tasks." These new duties were not described.

The Polish government said President Bierut had applied to the Russian government to place the Soviet marshal in Poland's service "in view of the fact that Marshal Rokossovsky is a Pole and is very popular with the Polish nation." The announcement said the Moscow government had agreed.

The appointment was effective immediately, and Rokossovsky is expected to make his first appearance before the Polish Parliament Tuesday.

In his order of the day he said: "I take over my post in order to devote all of my forces to further developing and strengthening our army and the defensive power of the republic."

He called on Polish armed forces to consolidate their bonds with the "powerful" Russian army and to increase political work and military training.

(Rokossovsky's appointment was characterized by the British Foreign Office in London as a "further and most important development in bringing about the subservience of Poland to the Soviet Union."

("It is the best answer to (Russian) charges of imperialism," said a Foreign Office spokesman.)

Diplomatic Privacy Vanishes

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

Russians Take Steps to Avert Another Tito

Berlin, Nov. 7 (AP).—Russia installed Soviet military chiefs in two test jobs today in an effort to insure that no new Tito challenges her grip on eastern Europe.

This was the interpretation placed by Western military men on the appointments of Marshal Konstantin Rokossovsky of the Soviet army as Polish minister of defense and Gen. Vassily Ghuikov as chief of the Soviet control commission for eastern Germany.

The moves placed two of Russia's prominent soldiers on the front where Soviet troops rub elbows with Western troops and along the direct line of communications with that front.

Russia's most direct line of communications between the homeland and its 300,000 advance troops in Germany runs through Poland.

The appointment of Chuikov was interpreted as a step to keep a tight military rein on eastern Germany despite installation of a puppet Communist regime which has been "recognized" by Moscow.

U. N. Meetings Now 'Covered' By Television

Lake Success, Nov. 7 (AP).—Television cameras moved into United Nations meetings today and privacy moved out.

A delegate's slightest unrehearsed frown or smile became visible to viewers on a (CBS) hookup. None of the diplomats wore makeup.

In the delegates' lounge a television receiver took over the place of honor. About 50 people from various countries gathered around it to watch the political committee in action next door.

The first speaker shown was Amazasp A. Arutiunian, Soviet delegate, stating Russian policy on the question of the disposal of the former Italian colonies.

Next to Arutiunian sat British minister of state Hector McNeil, forgetting he was being televised.

A minute later the warning scene was clearly shown.

Station WOIC, channel 9, Washington, is carrying the televised sessions daily, Monday through Friday, from 11 a. m. to 1 p. m., and from 3 p. m. to 4 p. m.

Swift Retaliation Against Moscow Jews Followed Demonstration at Israel Legation

(Sixth in a Series)

By Joseph Newman

Paris, Nov. 7 (NYHT)—One year ago, in the fall of 1948, an unauthorized popular demonstration was held in Moscow, one of the very few since Premier Joseph V. Stalin took power.

It occurred on Rosh Hashonoh, the Jewish new year's, at the Moscow synagogue. Members of the Israeli legation, headed by Mrs. Golda Myerson, had just arrived to open the first mission since Israel declared its independence and established diplomatic relations with the Soviet Union.

They were invited to attend the religious services at the synagogue. When Mrs. Myerson and members of her mission arrived, they were amazed at the huge throng of Jews which packed the entire street in front of the synagogue to greet them.

They were dumfounded at what happened next. There was an impassioned and almost hysterical outburst of feeling. Jewish men and women broke out in tears. They wept as they cheered and cried aloud: "We have waited all our lives for this! For Israel! Tomorrow to Jerusalem!"

Repeated Week Later

When the religious service was over, the demonstration in the street was resumed.

Apprehensive about the consequences of this unauthorized demonstration through the streets of Moscow, the Israelites rapidly withdrew to their rooms in the hotel.

The demonstration was repeated a week later on Yom Kippur, the Day of Atonement. There was good reason to fear its consequences.

The Russian Jews, in publicly proclaiming their desire to go to Palestine, had been guilty of something which is considered disloyalty to the Soviet regime and the Soviet state. Disloyalty of this kind, in the eyes of the Soviet rulers, is a crime related to treason.

Just as the Jews claim there can be but one God, so the Soviet leaders claim there can be but one state to which a citizen can owe allegiance.

Publishing Plants Closed

The Soviet leaders were not slow to react. They sounded a clear and strong warning to the Jews in Russia, numbering perhaps more than 3 million, that they would not be permitted to leave the Soviet Union and go to Israel. It took the form of a campaign to terrify Jews into abandoning the hope which they so widely demonstrated.

First, a group of Jews accused of having been ringleaders was imprisoned. A large number of others were cross-examined by police and terrified that they, too, might be jailed.

Next, the Soviet police raided and liquidated the only two Yiddish language printing plants in Moscow—the newspaper "Einheit" and "Emess," a house which published books, pamphlets and magazines in Yiddish.

At the same time they liquidated the offices of the Jewish Anti-Fascist Committee, which the Soviet leaders evidently felt had served its purpose in mobilizing support during the war.

The action was taken in such a way as to suggest it came from the highest councils of the regime—probably from the Politburo itself.

No Charges on Trial

There was no official notice; no charges; no trial.

Russian Jews also were barred from visiting the Israeli Legation, but the last and perhaps most damaging move was a nation-wide press campaign against Jews and Zionists.

For a time it was hard to tell whether the violent and vulgar campaign was directed against Jews because of their race or because of their Zionism. It officially contributed to the spread of latent anti-Semitism in the Soviet Union by providing an opportunity for anti-Semites to parade publicly as anti-Zionists.

Scores of Jews in all fields of intellectual life—science, education, literature, theater, cinema, music, art—were publicly humiliated by being denounced as "homeless cosmopolitans" and by having their original Jewish names printed after their adopted Russian names.

The campaign reached a climax in an article published by the newspaper Evening Moscow on March 14, 1949. The censor refused to permit correspondents to cable it abroad.

The diatribe was camouflaged as a reveiw of a book, "Years of Life," written several years ago by Isaac Bakhrakh. The reviewer, S. Ivanov, denounced the author for openly propagandizing Zionism in the Soviet Union.

The reviewer lampooned the Jews for believing in Jehovah and for studying the Talmud and he assailed the author for reproducing many passages from it.

The Soviet literary clique included only two prominent Jewish writers, Ilya Ehrenburg and David Zaslavsky.

Ehrenburg wrote a poisonous attack on Zionism. Soon after it appeared in the press, Mrs. Myerson asked to be introduced to the author at a party given by the Czech Embassy.

When Mrs. Myerson began addressing him in English, Ehrenburg stopped her with the remark: "I can't bear to hear English, especially when spoken by a Russian-born Jewess."

This shocked the small group of correspondents and diplomats. It brought a stinging rejoinder from the Israeli Minister, which ended the encounter.

Several months latter, when an American news magazine referred to the incident, Mrs. Myerson thought she would help both Russian Jews and Soviet-Israeli relations by issuing an indignant denial.

But some diplomats, with longer experience in Moscow, had learned that acquiescence in an offense encouraged the offender to repeat it.

Acheson Goes To Paris Talk

German government have to prove to others that they are thinking as Europeans. "They have got to earn the respect of other nations." The rest of Europe has an attitude of watchful waiting to see whether the Germans produce a program "that is cooperative rather than nationalistic."

A Right to Reparations

2. On the dismantling issue, "there is no question but that on legal and moral grounds the Western Allies have a right to the reparations promised them; the only question is how much actual value there is in these reparations." Hoffman said he had no sympathy with "propaganda," in Germany or in the United States, designed to reopen the dismantling problem.

3. The British attitude toward European economic integration was by no means as standoffish as had been reported last week. Sir Stafford Cripps, the British Chancellor of the Exchequer, "quite rightly" pointed out British obligations to the sterling countries when he said Britain could not join regional economic groupings in Europe. Cripps was "very active" at Paris last week in trying to get other Marshall Plan countries to get rid of their quotas on imports from within Europe.

What U. S. Wants

What the United States wanted, Hoffman said, was (1) the deepest possible cut in European import quotas; (2) an end to the dual pricing of commodities, with one price for home consumption and another for exports, and (3) a new payments plans that would take Europe "as far as possible" toward freely convertible currencies.

As a long-term objective, said Hoffman, he had proposed the creation of a single trading area in Europe, and as a step toward this goal the creation of regional groups, with lowered barriers within them and among one another.

"It's just a matter of time," he declared, "before Germany is brought into one of these groups." He said such a step was essential to prevent a new resurgence of German nationalism.

On this point Acheson is expected to have a good deal to say when he meet.. the British and French Foreign Ministers. The secretary, like Hoffman, is less interested in the old dispute over dismantling than in hastening German membership in the Council of Europe and more active German participation in the 18-nation Marshall Plan organization.

French Held Slow

So far, American officials believe, the French have been slow and grudging in admitting the Germans, and the Germans themselves have shown little enthusiasm for cooperative action.

In general, Hoffman said, European recovery since 1947 has been "almost a miracle."

"Europe is in no danger, as things stand now, of falling into the Russian orbit," he declared. "The American people never got so much for so little as for the eight billion dollars they have put into European recovery up to now."

Two Million Parade on Red Anniversary

Moscow, Nov. 7 (U.P.).—Russia celebrated the thirty-second anniversary of the Bolshevik revolution today with a gigantic parade in Red Square.

The theme of a brief speech by Marshal Alexander M. Vassilevsky, minister for the armed forces, and of innumerable banners carried by an estimated two million parading workers was that Russia desires work and peace.

For 75 minutes picked units of the army, air force and navy swung past the reviewing party at Nikolai Lenin's mausoleum.

Cadets of the military academies, massed officers representing all services, horse-drawn artillery, great motorized siege guns and rocket guns, Stalin tanks and mechanized cavalry were in the parade.

A fleet of four-motored bombing planes and scores of jet planes with swept-back wings roared overhead under the command of Lieut. Gen. Vassily Stalin, Premier Josef Stalin's son, who is chief of the air force for the Moscow military district. General Stalin piloted the flagship bomber.

The jet planes were out of sight before foreign military and air force attaches were able to identify them.

Before the parade started, Vassilevsky made the customary speech as reviewing officer to the massed troops lined 50-deep in the Red Square facing Lenin's tomb.

Vassilevsky took the same keynote as that which Georgi Malenkov, vice premier and member of the Politburo, had taken last night in an anniversary meeting at the Bolshoi Theater — "The Soviet Union stands only for peace."

(Moscow Radio, as heard in London, quoted Vassilevsky as saying: "We will not rest on our laurels. We shall fight still harder for the further growth and might of our state as a guarantee of our people's well-being and of peace.")

Vice Premier Viacheslav Molotov, Malenkov and other Politburo leaders were on top of the tomb. (No mention was made of Stalin's presence.)

Czechs Say Uranium Now Going to Reds

Prague, Nov. 7 (U.P.).—Communist Premier Antonin Zapotocky formally announced today that Czechoslovakia is shipping uranium to the Soviet Union.

"We can use it (the uranium) to wreck the imperialistic aims of the warmongers," Zapotocky shouted to tens of thousands of Prague workers.

"The USSR does not want a war and is doing everything to avoid it. But the Soviet Union knows well and is absolutely convinced that it has uncrushable power.

"It will never be sorry that it is sparing no work to make the plans of the inciters of war impossible," Silin declared.

Of the uranium, Zapotocky said: "You all know the recent Soviet declaration on the secret of the atom. Our country is often the target of foreign hecklers using a whispering campaign in connection with atomic energy.

"We have nothing to hide nor to be ashamed of. There are uranium deposits in our territories.

"We are proud that we, together with the Soviet Union and its science, use them to wreck the imperialist aims of the warmongers, strengthen the peaceful work of all antiwar progressive powers and secure the peace of the world."

Berlin Report

2 Russian Officers Die In Maneuvers

Berlin, Nov. 7 (AP).—The American-licensed newspaper Der Abend quoted a survivor today as saying two Soviet officers were drowned when a German freighter was torpedoed and sunk during Russian naval maneuvers in the Baltic on October 31.

Four of the 15 crewmen of the freighter were lost, the paper reported.

The Soviet officers were sent aboard the merchantman to pilot it through the maneuver area, the paper said. Despite their guidance of the 2800-ton freighter Hansa, en route from the East German port of Rostock to Reval in the Estonian Soviet Republic, the ship was hit by Soviet torpedo fire.

Soviet harbor officials at Rostock, Der Abend said, had given the German ship instructions to adhere strictly to a prescribed route.

Union Chiefs Deadlock on British Wages

London, Nov. 7 (NYHT).—British trade union leaders were deadlocked tonight over a new wage policy for the Trades Union Congress, which represents eight million organized workers.

These leaders conferred for four hours today without reaching agreement. The talks will resume Tuesday in an effort to evolve a wage policy satisfactory both to the labor government, which is demanding a wage freeze, and the TUC membership, half of which is asking for wage increases.

[The United Press said the left wing of the British Labor Party today cautiously advanced a suggestion for cutting 711 million dollars from Britain's annual defense costs, with other Western nations taking up the slack.

[The plan would: Cut Britain's annual military expenditure about 711 million dollars; increase the United States defense budget a tiny fraction; triple Canada's current expenses on armaments; more than double France's and Belgium's military budget; cut Australia's high military budget by more than half.

[The defense costs would be based on national income.]

British Recognition Of China Reds Forecast

London, Nov. 7 ((AP)). — Diplomatic officials reported tonight Britain is planning to give full recognition to the Chinese Communist regime "within weeks."

They said Foreign Secretary Bevin is expected to tell Secretary of State Acheson and French Foreign Minister Schuman so formally in Paris this week.

The British decision has been held up by a general agreement of the Western Powers and Commonwealth countries to consult one another before taking action on the subject.

Davis and Gates Are Denied Vote

New York, Nov. 7 (U.P.).—City Councilman Benjamin Davis, jr., and John Gates, two of the 11 convicted Communist leaders, today were denied the right to vote in tomorrow's elections.

Davis, who is running for reelection to the city governing body, and Gates, editor of the Daily Worker, were barred from the polls under a State law which denies the voting privilege to convicted felons. They were the only two of the 11 convicted Communists registered as voters in New York State.

On-the-Spot Report

'We're 49th State' Stage Gag Gets Grim Laughs in London

(Second of a Series)

By J. A. Livingston

In the play, "Her Excellency," at the Saville Theater in London, a character says, "We're the Forty-ninth State." It gets a grim laugh. The British, in all walks of life, see the United States taking over. They accept Marshall aid as necessary, but distrust it. Not easily do the purple robes of power slip from man or nation.

This tragedy, this transition from the greatest industrial and naval power in the world in the middle of the nineteenth century to just another country has been a slow process—traceable to two world wars and too much success too early. The picture of John Bull, a big, fat fellow, is a revealing economic commentary on Britain's industrial impoverishment and lack of food today. Let's examine that thesis.

In the 1850s, British industry was far ahead of the rest of the world—but British business men coasted. They and their bankers wanted to keep things on an even keel; no rocking the boat; no cutthroat competition. Cartels and trade associations sprang up. British researchers have tabulated more than a 1000 separate industrial trade agreements. The steel industry today resists nationalization. Yet at the same time members of the British Iron and Steel Federation agree to a set list of prices. And with the government's consent British has no antitrust law which prohibits competition in restraint of trade or price collusion.

Take Bookkeeper's View

Business men took a bookkeeper's view. Why scrap old machines that are still good, even though more efficient machines are available? Such standpattism was infectious. Workers and unions also resisted change. Yet all the while, in Germany and in the United States, industrialists were installing new equipment, were catching up.

Part of this growth elsewhere, of course, was because America and Germany were younger countries. Naturally they'd gain on a nation which was already mature. Part of it, too, was because of size. Obviously, America with an area of three million square miles versus Britain's 95,000, would expand rapidly. Part of it was because being behind Britain spurred Americans and Germans on. But more than that, America and Germany possessed what Great Britain had lost: Git up and go.

Jean Monnet, who is in charge of the French program for industrial modernization and reequipment, summed it up for me in Paris. He said: "High productivity is a willingness to change. That's what you have in America." Alfred P. Sloan, chairman of the board of General Motors Corp., summed it up a bit differently. He said that in America we make a car to satisfy people, and then as soon as we have done that, we make another one to make them dissatisfied with what they have. That's as true of manufacturers of machine tools, printing presses, derricks, and electric toasters as it is of automobiles.

Story Is in Statistics

The story is in the statistics. In the 53 years before the first World War, the United States increased its industrial output 12½ times, Germany more than 7 times, Great Britain only 3 times.

Index of Production

Country	1860	1913
Britain	100	300
Germany	100	700
United States	100	1250

These figures go far to explain the outbreak of the first World War. The Kaiser no longer feared Britain's economic strength. Germany had more than caught up. What the Kaiser did not contemplate was America's entry.

The two wars completed Britain's industrial downfall. The first cost Britain the flower of her manhood, 700,000 youths. Future leaders of the country, mostly volunteers, were mowed down soon after Germany invaded Belgium. Among them—as who doesn't recall?—was Rupert Brooke, who lost his life aboard a British destroyer, and who wrote so presciently:

"If I should die, think only this of me:
"That there's some corner of a foreign field
"That is forever England."

The 1914-18 loss of youth is visible today in British offices and factories, especially in family-owned businesses. Oftentimes the head of a company may be an elderly man, in his seventies. The generation which would have taken over—the men who'd be in their fifties today—is largely missing. The next in line may be a young man of 30 or 35. The seed of survival, of reenergization, which Britain so sorely needed in the '20s to keep pace with a booming, expanding United States has yet to be made up.

Cost One Quarter of Wealth

The Second World War cost Britain (in addition to casualities) about one-quarter of her national wealth: Twenty-nine billion four-hundred million dollars out of an estimated 121 billion dollars. Of this $2,800,000,000 constituted shipping losses; Six-billion dollar damage to homes and factories; $3,600,000,000 in undermaintenance—inability to keep machinery, equipment, and buildings in repair, and 17-billion dollars disinvestment. Four-billion, five-hundred million dollars of overseas investment were sold and $12,500,000,000 additional foreign debt was incurred.

The financial losses of the last war upset Britain's economic balance. Britain is still a creditor nation, true. But net income from investments has shrunk 67 percent—from 705 million dollars prewar to 230 million dollars today. Even that understates the loss. Because prices have doubled since '38, the purchasing power of Britain's investment income in world markets has dropped not 67 percent but 84 percent. So Britain is unable to pay for food and raw materials she long has been accustomed to import.

The wars also cost Britain markets. Shortage of shopping space prevented the British from serving customary markets. After the first war the Japanese were able to undersell British cotton manufacturers in China, Malaya, and the Duch East Indies. And in India, because British supplies were not available, domestic textile production was increased.

In this war, the United States supplied textiles to many British customers—Brazil, for instance. And, at the same time, the United States built industrial capacity—steel, aluminum, airplanes, synthetic rubber, automobiles, almost anything you can think of. Thus, as the British lost strength and markets, the United States gained strength and markets. Which makes Britain's task of regaining economic parity in the postwar world just that much harder.

(Next: Is Sir Stafford Cripps afraid of the future?)

West Likely To Make Peace With Germany

Paris, Nov. 7 (NYHT).—There is a good possibility that France, Britain and the United States will decide this week to put an end to their state of war with Germany, it was learned today.

Secretary of State Dean Acheson is expected here Tuesday afternoon for a conference with French Foreign Minister Robert Schuman and British Foreign Secretary Ernest Bevin.

The Western Allies believe it is premature to talk about a separate peace treaty with the western German government. By ending the "state of war" which still exists in theory, a gesture could be made to the Bonn government in view of the concessions made on paper by Russia to the Communist-controled government of eastern Germany.

Once the "state of war" was ended, the Germans would be able to send diplomatic representatives abroad, one western official said.

Germany is t be the main topic, but other matters may come up, officials say. An issue likely to cause trouble is the problem of the dismantling of German factories for reparations. The French and British are know n now to be in disagreement on this issue. They formerly sided together against the Americans.

Britain has now changed its mind about going through with the dismantling program, and has asked that the question be reviewed. Acheson is likely to be closer to Bevin on this issue than to Schuman.

Another question that may be raised is the unification of Europe.

John J. McCloy, American high commissioner in Germany, will arrive Tuesday morning for the Big Three conference. The other two commissioners, Andre Francois-Poncet and Gen. Sir Brian Robertson, are already here. Lewis W. Douglas, American Ambassador to Britain, will arrive Tuesday.

Bonn Calls for Halt To Dismantling

Bonn, Germany, Nov. 7 (U.P.).—The West German government today asked the Allied High Commission to halt its dismantling of German industries.

The Germans offered to negotiate "adequate security guarantees" in return for cessation of dismantling, a Bonn government spokesman said.

The note will be used as a basis for discussion when foreign ministers meet in Paris this week.

Parley Plans Defense For Mediterranean

Paris, Nov. 7.—Steps to forge a regional defense authority for the western Mediterranean — one of five such military planning boards to operate within the framework of the Atlantic Pact—were taken here today by the Defense Ministers of Britain, France and Italy.

Reich's New Force Stirs 'Gestapo' Fear

Frankfurt, Germany, Nov. 7 (U.P.).—The United States High Commission began an investigation today to determine whether western Germany's secret "antisubversive" service might turn into a Gestapo in disguise.

Police officials disclosed that the small, tightly knit force already was operating, with agents disguised as waiters, porters and chauffeurs in Bonn, seat of the West German government.

James L. McGraw, chief of public safety on the staff of United States High Commissioner John J. McCloy, said he dispatched an American to Bonn today to investigate.

(At Bonn—German government officials denied tonight the police department was a revival of Hitler's Gestapo. A spokesman said the force would have no power of arrest.)

U. S. Firms Sell Oil to Chinese Reds

By Robert S. Allen

United States oil companies are selling large quantities of oil to Communist China through British middlemen.

Leading companies engaged in this business are Standard of New Jersey, Socony-Vacuum, Standard of California, and Texas Oil Co.

The oil is being shipped in American tankers to Hongkong, British crown colony, and from there trans-shipped in British vessels to Shanghai and other Communist-held ports.

The Communists are paying for these purchases in dollars. Source of the curency is not known. The British pay for the oil partly in dollars and the remainder in pounds.

Most American business interests in China favor diplomatic relations with the Communists. The San Francisco Chamber of Commerce is also on record for that. The State Department is sending its ace trouble-shooter, Ambassador Phillip Jessup, to the Far East for a first-hand survey of the situation.

Reds Advance In Most Drives On Chungking

Hongkong, Nov. 7 (U.P.).—Nationalist government sources reported today they have halted the Communist advance on Chungking near Kienshih, a mountain village 210 miles to the northeast, but other Red army successes were closing a ring on the refugee capital.

Further south the Red armies were reported rolling once again within 50 miles of Kweilin, capital of Kiangsi Province.

A defense ministry spokesman acknowledged that the Communists have penetrated Szechuan, some 300 miles to the north, and said a new threat to Chungking is developing to the west. The spokesman said Red troops have reached Kienkiang, 13 miles due east of Chungking.

Reynolds in Los Angeles

Los Angeles, Nov. 7 (U.P.).—Millionaire Penmaker Milton Reynolds landed today at 11:45 a. m. (PST) at the "home plate" from which he took off six days ago in an unsuccessful attempt to break the record for round-the-world commuting.

British Hero of Desert Shot

Damascus, Syria, Nov. 7 (AP).—The Syrian government announced today an armed band last night critically wounded Michael Sterling, London Times correspondent who served as a British army colonel under Lawrence of Arabia in the First World War.

Sterling was shot at a dinner party in his home by three armed intruders who broke in while two others stood guard outside.

Sterling was "much better" this afternoon, although still in a serious condition.

Sterling's cook also was badly wounded. Cause of the assault is unknown.

(Dispatches from neighboring Beirut, capital of Lebanon, quoted Syrian newspapers as reporting recently that Sterling, a former British intelligence agent, and Brig. John Clubb Pasha, British commander of Hashemite Jordan's Arab Legion, had been active contacting tribal leaders in northern Syria. King Abdullah of Jordan is ambitious to link Syria with his kingdom.

Beirut sources said Sterling was shot three times by men posing as friendly tribesmen while the correspondent and his wife were at dinner with several friends. A policeman also was reported wounded.

Syria is trying to get back to government on a legal and constitutional basis after two military coup d'etats in five months.

There has been talk of a possible coup No. 3 in the near future, led by dissatisfied elements of Syria's loosely knit army.

Wife of Man Held in Korea Asks Aid Here

By Lee Grove
Post Reporter

Mrs. Virginia Meschter wants her husband back, and she'd like everybody to know it.

Her huband, Alfred, 31, is one of two American Economic Administration officials missing in Communist North Korea. The other is Albert Willis.

They were serving as advisers aboard the merchant vessel Kimball R. Smith when it was seized in Korean waters "outside Russian jurisdiction" more than a month ago.

Served Four Years With WAC

"There is just too much of this sort of thing going on," said Alfred Meschter's wife, a blue-eyed blonde with a determined chin. "It is causing wives and families too much needless suffering.

"I think the United States is letting Russia go a little too far," said Mrs. Meschter, who served four years with the WAC.

The Meschters were married in New York July 16, 1948. She was working in Hartford, Conn., when she heard late in October that he was missing. She took their four-and-a-half-month-old son, Robert ("Skipper") Tuck Meschter, home to her mother in Maine, and came to Washington this weekend "to stay until something develops."

She is staying with a sister, Mrs. Arthur Green, of 11703 Grandview ave., Silver Spring, Md.

Visits State Department

"I want Alfred back because he is my husband and for the baby. He has never seen the baby. When the baby had to have an operation I kept wondering why he didn't send any money. But of course he never got my letters."

Yesterday Mrs. Meschter visited the State Department, ECA and Red Cross.

"They were just wonderful to me," she said, "but it is getting my husband back that counts.

Meschter, a Merchant Marine Academy graduate with his master's papers, was serving aboard the Kimball R. Smith as an adviser in seamanship to the Korean crew, his wife said.

Two Notes Sent Russia

No news of the vessel has been received since September 24, and it is believed to have been seized by North Korean Communists.

On October 3 the State Department asked the Soviet government as the "responsible authority in North Korea" to help find and release the men. On October 13 the Soviet government suggested that the United States inquire of the Korean People's Democratic Republic—a government the United States has not recognized.

The State Department is now waiting for a reply to its second note, of October 29, to the Russians.

Meschter and Willis carried American diplomatic passports.

2 Nations Ask End of Atomic Selfishness

Lake Success, Nov. 7 (NYHT).—France and Canada jointly proposed today that the United Nations General Assembly urge all nations to give up atomic selfishness, so the U. N. itself could go out to develop atomic energy for peaceful uses, and at the same time insure a real ban on atomic weapons.

The 59-nation Assembly's special political committee thus started a new attempt to break a U. N. deadlock that has lasted more than three years.

Warren R. Austin of the United States immediately indorsed the French-Canadian proposals, which would call on the Big Five powers and Canada to continue to try to work out agreement on specific atomic controls.

Comment was declined by Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Yakov A. Malik, whose country has repeatedly rejected the majority plan for U. N. operation of atomic activities and has insisted on national operation with only limited U. N. inspection.

Toughest of all the opening-day statements came from Sir Carl Berendsen of New Zealand, who bluntly declared that "all the world but the Soviet Union is ready to accept that international control and supervision which is obviously essential."

Smaller nations intervened in the debate. Sir Benegal Narsing Rau of India proposed to ask the Assembly's international law commission to codify agreed parts of the majority plan by next July 31.

Stephen M. Alexis of Haiti reported a belief by "highly qualified scientists" that small atomic weapons, available for purchase by even medium-sized nations, might be developed in three or four years.

The joint resolution submitted by Jena Chauvel of France and Lester B. Pearson of Canada proposed the Assembly:

1. Urge all nations to join in "a cooperative development and use of atomic energy from peaceful ends."

2. Call on governments "to do everything in their power to make possible, by the acceptance of effective international control, the effective prohibition and elimination of atomic weapons."

3. Ask continuance of six-power consultations "to explore all possible avenues and examine all concrete suggestions."

4. Recommend that "all nations join in mutual agreement to renounce the individual exercise of such rights of sovereignty in the control of atomic energy as, in the light of the foregoing considerations, are incompatible with the promotion of world security and peace."

Pearson said Soviet atomic development "may hasten agreement, by giving the rulers of that country more knowledge of the fateful implications for good or for evil, of this power and more understanding of the scientific processes which any adequate system of control must take firmly into account."

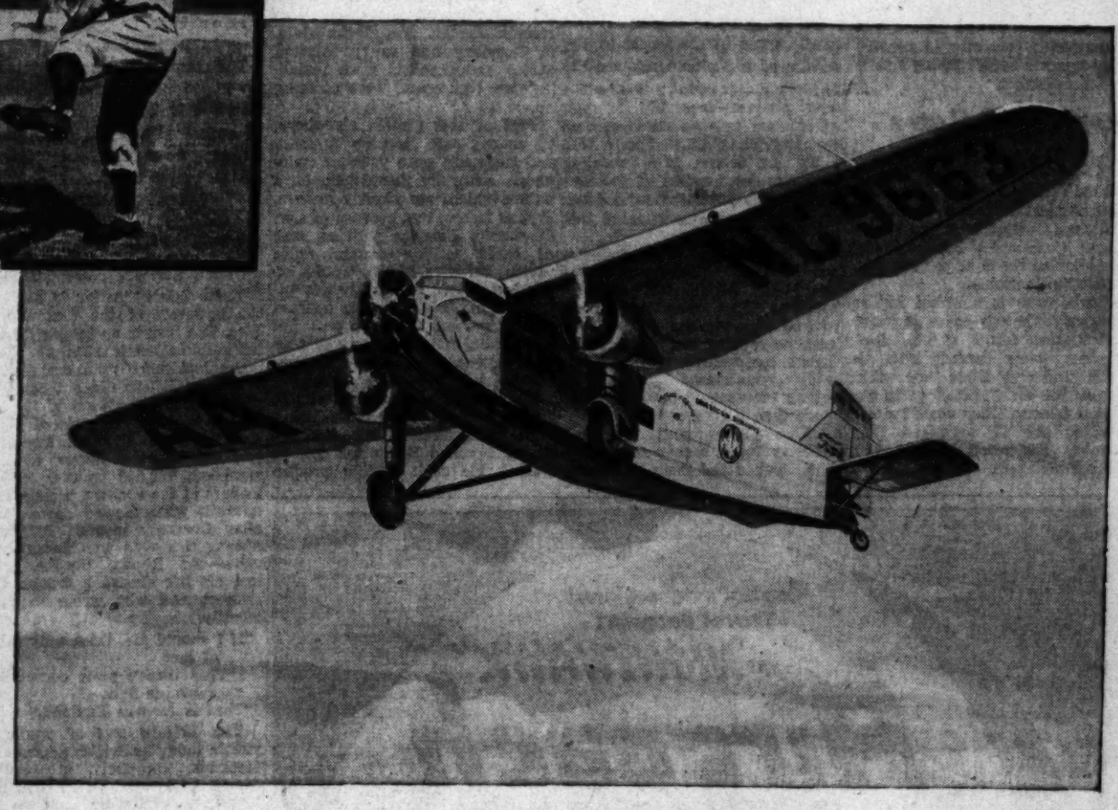
IT WAS A BIG YEAR FOR THE NATION'S CAPITAL



The Senators Won the Pennant...

American Airlines Began Service to Chicago

Yes, 1933 was a banner year for Washington! Joe Cronin piloted the Senators into their first pennant in eight years. And, American Airlines inaugurated the first air service between Washington and Chicago. A Ford Tri-Motor made the first trip in the then remarkable time of 7 hours and 27 minutes.

For the next ten years, American offered the only airline service between Washington and Chicago. As aircraft design progressed, American kept pace by replacing the Ford Tri-Motor with the more modern Vultee, Curtis Condor, Stinson and Douglas DC-2. And, in April 1937, the newer DC-3 was placed in nonstop service between Washington and Chicago.

Today these airplanes have been replaced by five-mile-a-minute DC-6 Flagships. These luxury DC-6's leave Washington at 2:30 P.M. and 5:30 P.M. and fly nonstop to Chicago in just 2 hours and forty minutes. The special appointments of these speedy 52-passenger Flagships are striking evidence of just how far air travel, especially Flagship travel, has come since that flight in 1933. American has consistently been first to offer the finest in equipment and service to the people of Washington.

Liberals Boycott Colombia Election

Bogata, Columbia, Nov. 7 (U.P.).—Dario Echandia, Liberal party candidate for president, announced tonight that he and other leaders of his party had decided to boycott the November 27 presidential elections.

Echandia accused Conservative President Mariano Ospina Perez of having failed to keep his promises to maintain public order and assure free and fair elections. "You cannot say that legal order exists in this country," he said.

The Liberals have blamed the Conservatives for the political unrest and riots.

The Conservatives place the blame for the violence on the Liberals.

The newspaper El Liberal said political rioting at one point in northern Colombia had reached proportions of a "pitched battle" involving more than 1600 men.

No Ballots for Voters

Clear Spring, Md., Nov. 7 (AP).—Nobody lead the ballots today as the polls opened in this town of 500 for election of a burgess and three commissioners.

The poll workers and voters turned up, but the ballots didn't. Neither did Donald Ankeney, retiring burgess, who was supposed to supply them. The commissioners called a meeting to decide on a new election date.

Lleras Quits After Colombian Protest

Alberto Lleras, a Colombian, yesterday resigned as secretary general of the Organization of American States and director general of the Pan American Union.

Colombian Ambassador Eduardo Zuleta Angel had protested to Joseph Charles, acting chairman of the OAS council and Ambassador from Haiti, that a statement Lleras issued October 31 was interference in Colombia's presidential campaign by an international official. The Colombian election is scheduled for November 27.

In his statement Lleras, former president of Colombia, deplored the political clashes causing heavy casualties in Colombia recently. He also denied an allegation by Conservative President Ospina Perez that the Libral Party is communistic. Lleras is a member of the Liberal Party.

There was speculation that the Pan American Union and the OAS might reject Lleras' resignations. It was understood he had offered them in order to leave the OAS entirely free in acting on the protest.

The Organization of American States was formed by the 21 American republics at a conference at Bogota, Colombia, March 30 to May 2, 1948. Its declared purpose is to promote the solidarity and strengthen the collaboration of the American republics.

It is an outgrowth in effect of the Pan American Union, originally established in 1890 primarily to promote trade among the American republics.

50,000 Messages Sent Medina Since Trial

New York, Nov. 7 (U.P.).—Federal Judge Harold R. Medina, who presided at the Communist conspiracy trial, said today he has no thought of entering politics.

He said many of the 50,000 messages he has received snce the end of the trial urged him to try for political office, including the Presidency. But, he added: "I'm perfectly contented right where I am."

Heiress at Inquiry Denies Espionage

By The Associated Press

Wealthy Mrs. Louise Bransten Berman yesterday refused to answer a barrage of questions from the House Un-American Activities Committee in its investigation of communism.

The red-headed heiress from San Francisco and New York similarly balked at responding to the committee's inquiry a year ago.

At one point, however, she interrupted today's questioning and angrily told Chairman Wood (D., Ga.):

"Mr. Wood, I have never engaged in any espionage activity."

Complains of Harassment

Indignant at what she termed "my continued harassment" by the committee, Mrs. Berman countered more than 20 questions with the stock answer used by many other witnesses haled before the House committee:

"I refuse to answer on grounds afforded by the Fifth Amendment."

The constitutional amendment, as interpreted in court decisions, provides that witnesses are entitled to remain silent if their testimony would tend to incriminate them.

The 40-year-old witness, beneficiary of a $500,000 trust fund when her father died in 1929, refused to say whether she ever contributed to Communist front organizations.

She gave affirmative answers to two questions. Yes, she said, she had met Paul Robeson. And she knew Harry Bridges.

Cut Off on Statement

Wood cut her off when she attempted to read a statement at the outset of the hearing.

"Just answer the question," Wood said patiently.

Later, the statement was handed to newsmen. It said Mrs. Berman has never committed a disloyal act, and quoted her as saying:

"A year ago I said I was sure that if I had spent my money on yachts and jewels this committee would have had no fault to find with me and would not have bothered me.

"I say again that if I had pampered myself with luxury living and become an expensive cipher, I would not have been smeared by this committee.

"On the contrary, I might even have been appointed ambassador to some small or medium-sized duchy."

Allusion Apparent

The latter was apparently an allusion to President Truman's recent appointment of Mrs. Perle Mesta as Ambassador to Luxembourg.

Committee Investigator Louis B. Russell has testified that in 1944 Mrs. Berman loaned $50,000 to a West Coast Communist publication. Russell identified her as the former wife of Richard Bransten, once owner of the magazine New Masses, and as the present wife of Lionel Berman of New York.

Passport Data On Chambers Sought by Hiss

New York, Nov. 7 (AP).—Alger Hiss' lawyer said today he intends to find out whether Whittaker Chambers made any trips abroad during the period when Chambers says he was meeting weekly with Hiss.

The lawyer, Claude B. Cross, asked District Judge William Bondy to sustain a court order telling the State Department to produce any passport applications made by Chambers between 1930 and 1939.

Chambers is the Government's chief witness against Hiss, a former high State Department official who is charged with perjury.

Quash Motion Made

Cross obtained the passport order from United States District Judge Edward A. Conger last Tuesday. The Government asked Bondy today to quash it.

Opposing the Government's motion, Cross said it would be material to the case if it developed that Chambers was abroad at a time when he claims to have been meeting regularly with Hiss.

Chambers says Hiss gave him secret State Department papers for transmittal to a prewar Soviet spy ring. Hiss denied this before a Federal grand jury and was charged with purjury as a result. His first trial ended in a jury disagreement. The second trial is scheduled to begin November 17.

Chemical Tests Asked

Hiss' lawyer also asked permission today to have chemical tests made on some of the documents produced by the Government as evidence against Hiss in the first trial.

He said he wanted to find out whether the paper was of a type which is rare and which might not have been available to Hiss or to his wife.

The documents include memoranda which the Government says Hiss made from State Department papers and later passed to Chambers. Mrs. Hiss has testified she did typing for her husband to help him in his work.

Judge Bondy reserved decision on all the motions.

Expert Says Burgman Had Delusions

A neuropsychiatrist testified yesterday in District Court that in 1946 treason defendant Herbert J. Burgman was a "pathological Milquotoast."

That description of the meek-appearing 53-year-old native of Minnesota who is accused of broadcasting treasonous propaganda for the Germans was given by Dr. James F. Dyde, now of New York City.

Dr. Dyde said he graduated from medical school in 1944 and by 1946 was a neuropsyciatrist for the Army in Germany when Burgman came under his scrutiny as a prisoner.

The physician said that he characterized Burgman as "schizophrenic reaction, chronic, mild."

He said that Burgman at the time of the examination was under stress, was depressed, inhibited, and had delusional ideas that he was an "unworthy, no-good person," and that people were talking about him.

Dr. Dyde said that while Burgman could distinguish right from wrong, in his opinion he could not act on this "moral judgment." As a result, Dr. Dyde, testified, Burgman could not make decisions for himself but could follow orders well.

"He would follow them out to the last degree with great competency," Dr. Dyde said.

It has been Burgman's testimony that he was merely carrying out orders of his German superiors during the war and feared on pain of death to disobey.

Coplon Plea For Dismissal Meets Delay

New York, Nov. 7 (AP).—Hearing on Judith Coplon's motion to call off her second espionage trial on the ground that she is being tried twice for the same offense was postponed today until Wednesday.

This apparently will delay her trial with Valentin Gubitchev, Russian engineer and former United Nations employe, slated to start Wednesday.

Also scheduled to be heard on Wednesday is pre-trial testimony on Miss Coplon's petition for return of documents taken from her last March 4 by FBI agents when she and Gubitchev were arrested under the Third avenue elevated.

The defense claims that Miss Coplon was arrested and searched without warrants and that the documents, the backbone of the Government's case against her, therefore are illegally in the Government's possession.

even 1952 overtones, the contest has attracted more national interest than any other special election in years.

In spotty elections from New York to California, the voters also will choose two House members, two Governors and scores of mayors and lesser officials.

In the House contests:

Election of Mrs. Edna F. Kelley (D) in New York's Tenth District, to succeed the late Democratic Representative Andrew L. Somers, appeared taken for granted. The Republican challenger is George H. Frankuchen.

In California's Fifth District, Democrats are hopeful of picking up a Republican seat. They are running a labor leader, John F. Shelley, against Lloyd Cosgrove, GOP lawyer, for the vacant House seat of the late Richard J. Welch.

National interest focused, too, on the New Jersey gubernatorial election. Democratic State Senator Elmer H. Wene with AFL support is running against Republican Governor Alfred E. Driscoll. Charging Wene is linked with the old Hague organization, CIO withheld its support.

Battle Victory Seems Assured

Virginia, where the primaries control, is electing a Governor, but there is little interest outside. Election of Democratic State Senator John S. Battle for the top State post over Republican Walter Johnson seemed assured.

A three-way race for Mayor of New York had cross-over voting possibilities that could affect the Senate race. The odds narrowly favored Democratic Mayor William O'Dwyer to win over GOP-Liberal-Fusion candidate Newbold Morris. The American Labor Party's Vito Marcantonio, third man in the race, is the complicating factor. He reputedly has instructed his left-wing followers to vote a straight ALP ticket and keep out of the Senate race.

The New York Senate race, rated by politicians on both sides as one of the "dirtiest" and hardest to clock in the history of the State, rounded the last lap with these counter claims:

Edward C. Maguire, Lehman campaign manager, predicted election of Lehman by 400,000.

William L. Pfeiffer, GOP State chairman, predicted election of Dulles by 250,000.

Privately, other leaders on both sides said you couldn't call the turn in figures.

Democrats voiced confidence that Lehman would win but conceded the margin might hinge on the size of a reported Catholic defection and how many ALP votes Lehman gets.

Not Too Optimistic

Republicans claimed the race has tightened in recent weeks. Privately they were represented as "not too optimistic" they could overtake the once wide Lehman lead but unwilling to concede anything until the last vote is counted.

The Dulles problem was to roll up enough votes upstate to offset the normally big Democratic plurality in the city. In other words, if Lehman can be held to a margin of around 500,000 in the city Dulles can win. Democrats claim Lehman's city margin will be nearer 700,000.

Polls will open all over the State at 6 a. m. today and the voting will continue until 7 p. m.

CIO, AFL and some of the railroad brotherhoods, viewing this as a curtain-raiser for their 1950 fight on the Taft-Hartley Act and reelection of Senator Robert A. Taft (R., Ohio), have united solidly behind Lehman.

This Administration, accepting it as a test of the "Fair Deal," has also done all it could. President Truman's Saturday night radio appeal for Lehman, followed entry of Attorney General J. Howard McGrath and Secretary of Labor Maurice J. Tobin into the melee on Lehman's side.

Behind Dulles is Gov. Thomas F. Dewey's strong State organization. Governor Dewey reputedly persuaded Dulles to make the race and has stumped the State for him like an active candidate. Dulles had some outside help, too. Senator Arthur Vandenberg (R., Mich.) from his convalescent bed, sent a letter strengthening Dulles' argument that he is needed in the Senate to bolster United States foreign policy.

Additional funds are expected on unpaid pledges until the end of the year.

The Gallup Poll

Lehman Leads Final Survey On Senate Race in New York

By George Gallup
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

Princeton, N. J., Nov. 7.—Using a new system of sampling, the Institute found the division of voter sentiment in its final survey of the New York senatorial race to be:

Lehman	46%
Dulles	34
Undecided	20

Interviewing of voters began October 17 and ended Friday, November 4. Changes of sentiment resulting from speeches or events in the final week of the bitterly fought senatorial campaign are therefore not reflected in the findings.

The new system of sampling is based upon area or probability sampling. Research experts will be watching to see whether it proves more accurate than the "quota" sampling system used in elections in the past 15 years with an over-all error averaging 4 percentage points. The test is whether the new method will better this mark.

How Undecided Voters "Lean"

To be meaningful in terms of the actual vote Tuesday, attention must be drawn to the large number of voters who remained undecided at the time they were interviewed.

They were asked first, "Which way are you leaning at the present time—toward the Republican candidate Dulles, or the Democratic candidate Lehman?" Those who still remained undecided were then asked, "If you HAD to decide TODAY, which man would you vote for?"

The results showed a close division of sentiment—7 percent for Lehman and 6 percent for Dulles, with 7 percent still undecided.

Adding all these to the previous groups the candidate standings become:

Lehman	53%
Dulles	40
Still undecided	7

How the group of 7 percent who are still undecided will behave on election day cannot be ascertained with complete accuracy. One assumption is that if they vote they will divide their allegiance in approximately the same way as those who do state a preference.

Assuming that they will vote as the others, the standing of the candidates would be:

Lehman	57%
Dulles	43

Truman Plans Rest At Key West Retreat

President Truman's travel plans for the next two months call for a rest at Key West, Fla., starting November 28, and attendance at the Army-Navy football game at Philadelphia on November 26, it was announced yesterday. He will leave for Florida after attending a concert here on November 27 starring his daughter, Miss Margaret Truman. The duration of his Florida vacation is not definite, but it may be for three weeks, during which he will work on his state of the Union message for presentation to Congress early in January.

Philippine Victory Seen for Quirino

Manila, Nov. 7 (NYHT).—Victory for President Elpidio Quirino in the Philippines presidential election Tuesday seemed tonight to be assured.

The opposition Nacionalistas, backing former President Jose P. Laurel, have abandoned the fight in boss-ridden Negros Occidental Province.

Laurel headquarters here announced today that all of the party's candidates in Negros Occidental have fled under threats of violence and that the Nacionalista election inspectors will resign tonight, rather than serve at the polls.

Quirino has been President since the death, on April 15, 1948, of Manuel A. Quezon, the first Philippine president, under whom Quirino was vice president. Quirino, leader of the Liberal Party, is seeking a full four-year term.

Laurel, puppet president of the Philippines during the Japanese occupation, is leader of the Nacionalista Party. A third candidate, Jose Avelino, heads a splinter group which broke off from the Liberal Party.

Negros Occidental Province has 285,000 of the five million registered voters, and Gov. Rafael Lacson has promised Quirino a 150,000 majority in his bailiwick.

That he will be able to turn in whatever majority may be needed several days after the results of the voting elsewhere are known is absolutely certain, according to observers.

Agents of Governor Lacson last night arrested another 50 persons in his province, charging illegal possession of guns. How many more arrests have been made in Negros Occidental and in equally embattled Lanao, seat of Moro power is unknown, but estimates in Manila run as high as 400. Carrying guns has been declared illegal for 20 days from November 1, by decree. Quirino's opposition complains that his local henchmen are arming special guards by the hundred to police Tuesday's voting.

7 Boys Seized In Downtown Burglary Wave

With arrest of seven boys, 13 to 15 years old, police announced yesterday they have solved nine burglaries committed in the downtown area in the past three weeks.

One of the breakins, on October 25, was at the Garrison Toy & Novelty Co., 1215 E st. nw., where the young marauders nearly wrecked the interior of the four-floor establishment.

All seven boys have been charged with housebreaking and were turned over yesterday to juvenile authorities.

Two officers in a scout car, cruising in the rear of the Surplus Sales Co., 425 10th st. nw., Sunday, saw a quantity of sporting goods under an auto in the alley. They noticed two youths run from the alley. The officers broadcast descriptions. An hour later, precinct detectives picked them up.

They told officers that two other members of the gang, earlier Sunday, had burglarized the Surplus Sales Co., store, loaded loot into suitcases from the store, and left them on a garage roof in the rear for later removal.

Police went to the homes of five others of the gang and arrested them, recovering most of the loot.

Other places the boys admitted burglarizing were the Surplus Sales Co., on one previous occasion; a wholesale toy firm at 423 10th st. nw., next door to the Surplus Sales Co.; an antique store in the 800 block of Market Space, nw.; secondhand stores at 716 K st. nw., and 631 Indiana ave. nw.; the display department of The Hecht Co.; and an antique store at 709 G st. nw., and Garrison's.

New City Solicitor Authorized for Greenbelt

The Greenbelt City Council last night voted to authorize City Manager Charles T. McDonald to appoint a new city solicitor replacing John S. White, the incumbent.

The authorization was asked by McDonald in a report which said White has lacked time to take care of all his work.

McDonald's request came during budgetary talks, in which he recalled that up to two years ago, Greenbelt was drawing gasoline tax funds from the county. Since then, McDonald pointed out, the county commissioners have ruled against further grants on grounds the Greenbelt roads are Government-owned. Greenbelt's share of gas tax proceeds this year would have totaled $2200, it was estimated.

McDonald said he would ask Ralph G. Powers, a former city solicitor, to reassume the post. Powers took military leave during the war, and did not return to the job.

McDonald disclosed without explanation, that Dr. William Eisner had not been acting as health officer since September, and that McDonald had assumed the position.

The council will meet in closed session Thursday at 8 p. m. with the Greenbelt Veterans Housing Corp. to discuss the corporation's efforts to purchase the city from the Government.

Communism Ban Debated At K. C. Forum

Outlawing communism would be a "snare and a delusion to the American public" and a "confession of weakness," declared Frank Nash, Georgetown University law professor, last night.

He took the negative in a debate sponsored by the Washington Council, Knights of Columbus, at Gonzaga Auditorium, declaring "legal prohibition would drive communism further underground, where it flourishes best.

"Like other rotten organisms," Nash said, "communism likes darkness and dampness. By outlawing it we would be giving up the weapon they fear most, the glare of the spotlight."

Nash's opponent, Representative Harry R. Sheppard (D., Calif.), said that much of the Communist Party's "insidious" activity already is underground. Outlawed by law, Sheppard said, the party would lose much of its financial support, and probably would be crippled.

Bridges Asks Halt To All Miners' Aid

Strike Still On

Union Asks Probe of Gravel Firm

A staff member of the House Labor Committee has been studying the labor relations of the Smoot Sand & Gravel Corp., whose union employes have been on strike since last August 29, it was learned yesterday.

John P. Shields, business agent of Local 77, International Union of Operating Engineers (AFL), one of the two striking Smoot employe unions, said he had asked for a committee investigation of the firm.

Company executives have been before committee staff members during the past two or three weeks, Thomas A. Butt, company treasurer, said last night.

However, he added, he and other officials received the impression that the matter would not be taken up by the House committee itself because it was not of national importance.

Shields made his request to Joseph Jarosz, a committee staff investigator, now out of town. No information was available yesterday at the committee's office.

Meanwhile, representatives of the company, the operating engineers' union and Local 639, Teamsters Union (AFL), which also is on strike against the Smoot firm, met yesterday at the request of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service.

James Holden, Federal mediator on the case, said no progress was made at the meeting, and that he would continue his efforts to bring the parties together.

Senator Styles Bridges (R., N. H.) announced yesterday that he has demanded an immediate halt to emergency cash benefits being paid out of the United Mine Workers Welfare Fund.

Bridges, neutral trustee of the fund, declared that the payments being made for emergency cases must be stopped because they are illegal. All other welfare fund benefits—such as pensions—were suspended by the trustees in mid-September.

The Washington Post revealed in a story on October 31 that at a recent meeting of the trustees Bridges for the first time had voted with Ezra Van Horn, trustee for the employers, to block John L. Lewis' move to unfreeze some $9,000,000 in welfare funds, collected from 20-cents-a-ton royalties since June 30, 1949.

Gives No Contract as Reason

At this meeting, and again yesterday, Bridges contended it would be illegal to expend this $9,000,000 for welfare benefits of any kind, because the work contract between the United Mine Workers and the mine owners had expired July 1. The soft coal miners went on strike on September 19 to win an improved contract.

Bridges confirmed that he had written a letter to Lewis, trustee for the miners and chairman of the trustees, that he was "deeply concerned at the rate of expenditures" for the emergency hospital and medical care payments. It is understood that in mid-October there was only $3,000,000 in the fund which was collected before June 30. Most of that $3,000,000 will have been spent by mid-November.

Bridges Intends to Resign

The New Hampshire legislator said he wants all remaining money in the fund to be put into a reserve until the courts determine what to do with the money, or until a new contract is negotiated.

"I'm being sued in four States and the District of Columbia now," Bridges wrote Lewis. He added he intends to resign as neutral trustee as soon as the fund's difficulties are straightened out.

The trustees voted on September 16 to suspend payments except for emergency cases in order to keep the fund from going into the red. Since then, Ezra Van Horn has resigned as employers' trustee and has been succeeded, a few days ago, by Charles I. Dawson, of Louisville, Ky.

Postlude

Trumans See Fine British Ballet Here

By Paul Hume

The Sadler's Wells Ballet opened the first of three sold-out engagements in Constitution Hall last night. President and Mrs. Truman occupied their usual box.

The popular British company brought its brightest stars and a sparkling repertoire to this country. It is one of the notable dance companies of our decade and we are honored by its visit.

It was my good fortune to see the company in New York two days ago. There, on the spacious stage of the Metropolitan Opera, they were able to present perfect ballet of the old tradition. Full-length Tschaikowsky works such as Sleeping Beauty and Swan Lake occupied the entire program on different evenings.

Last night, as is customary with Washington ballet representations, shortcomings of stage space, lighting, scenery, and every conceivable type of limitation, made it impossible to acquire any accurate conception of the merits of this company.

Moira Shearer Dances Beautifully

We saw beautiful dancing by Moira Shearer and Margot Fonteyn. There was clever miming by the entire cast used in The Rake's Progress and again in Facade.

The music was witty, but the company could not sparkle in its new, cramped quarters last night. Mishaps befell both of the feminine stars, through no fault of theirs. We know them to be exceptional dancers, and it was a joy to see them again.

They were well assisted by Michael Somes, Alexis Russine, and their ensemble. In the brighter ballets, Harold Turner as the Rake, Violetta Elvin as the girl he betrayed, and a whole gallery of fine dancers made the best possible contributions.

Frederick Ashton, principal choreographer of the company, and June Brae did a sensational piece of comedy in their Tango.

We do not blame the owners of our only concert hall for the evening. We cannot but praise our British visitors, and apologize to them for our inadequacies.

We hope the situation was clear to the President in his box and that he may take some interest in aiding the building of some decent auditorium for music in our Capital.

As it was, the entire evening was gracious but with none of the excitement Sadler's Wells usually arouses. They were ably conducted by Robert Irving. But the acquisition of Robert Zeller as guest conductor from New York for their tour must already seem unfortunate to them.

Ex-GI Reenlists To Keep Pledge . . .

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

DEATH-MARCH PROMISE—Sergt. Walter Konetsco, Connellsville, Pa., is back in the Army again to keep a promise to 170 buddies during a "death march" across Germany. Konetsco was among a group of prisoners seized in December, 1944, in the Battle of the Bulge. In the next three months the prisoners were forced to make a 700-mile "walk till you drop" march across Germany. The 32-year-old truck driver promised 170 GIs he would talk to their families when he returned home. Konetsco, who is pointing out the route of the forced march, has seen 40 of the families to date. Last weekend he reenlisted in the Army as a means of traveling to see the remaining 130 families. He is stationed in New Cumberland, Pa.

Plumber Contract Talks Resume Today

Contract negotiations between officials of the plumber laborers' union and the Plumbing Contractors Association are expected to be resumed this afternoon, Federal Mediator Charles G. Baker, jr., said yesterday.

Some 300 members of the AFL International Hod-Carriers and Laborers Union had threatened to strike yesterday over their demand for a 10 cents an hour wage increase, but postponed such action when the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service entered the dispute.

District Court Garnishee Case Rule Reversed

The United States Court of Appeals yesterday ruled that the American Red Cross was not violating the law in paying R. D. Jameson his semimonthly salary on May 28, 1948.

In so doing, the court reversed an opinion of the United States District Court, which had held the Red Cross had paid Jameson in advance in order to avoid an attachment against his salary by Rose Perel Jameson.

The lower court held that since the Red Cross had honored two previous writs of attachment, in the form of garnishees against Jameson's salary, it had "constructive notice" of "forthcoming garnishments."

The Court of Appeals held that Red Cross paid Jameson's salary on the last working date of the month, which was a regular pay date, and that it followed usual procedure in giving him his check. A garnishee had been issued upon Jameson's salary the preceding day, it was brought out, but was not served on ARC until the salary payment had been made.

to be in touch with Lewis by telephone.

By Wednesday night, Ching said, he and his top aides will be able to evaluate "more clearly" the results of the separate conferences. He may then follow up with a joint meeting of the representatives of the mines and union Thursday.

Some high Government officials consider this to be a "week of decision" in the coal strike. Unless "real progress" toward peace in the coal industry is made by the end of the week, President Truman is expected to intervene personally, perhaps by setting up a fact-finding board.

Around half a million steelworkers struck October 1 to win noncontributory pensions and social insurance. The union settled a week ago Monday with Bethlehem for $100 a month minimum pensions and jointly financed social insurance. The Bethlehem pension includes Federal Social Security. The union now considers the Bethlehem formula the key to peace in the industry.

Republic, No. 3 steel producer, is also in the process of working out a settlement along the lines of the Bethlehem formula.

Other big companies said to be making offers to the union are Wheeling Steel, Youngstown Sheet & Tube, Inland Steel, Allegheny-Ludlum, Colorado Fuel & Iron. There was a strange silence emanating from U. S. Steel, biggest producer of them all, which took the lead in opposing noncontributory pensions and social insurance.

Carnegie-Illinois Steel Corp. yesterday came to the rescue of coal-short Pittsburgh by making more than 50,000 tons of soft coal available to meet the emergency needs of hospital and public buildings. The U. S. Steel subsidiary also agreed to furnish 1500 tons of the high quality metallurgical coal daily for emergency purposes.

Tax Exemption Of Club Studied

The Montgomery County supervisor of assessments and director of finance are studying an order of the County Tax Appeal Court providing tax exemption for clubhouse property of the Woman's Club of Chevy Chase.

The court order, exempting the property at 7431 Connecticut ave. from taxes currently amounting to $1500, must be concurred in by the two department heads.

The court determined that the club's corporate charter complies with requirements set by an act of the General Assembly this year for tax exemption.

A suit for setting aside 1948-49 taxes is now pending before the State Court of Appeals.

What's YOUR price tag on happiness?

The smartest bit of automobile styling on the road today? The standout beauty of tapering fenders—the sturdy protection of a wholly new front-end design?

The prestige that's in the Buick name—the solid, road-wise steadiness Buick has always stood for?

Your chance to get in on the perfect smoothness of Dynaflow Drive*—this being the lowest-priced car on which that sensational new transmission is available?

They're all there, every one of those things. And for a good reason that may go a bit beyond the usual idea in designing an automobile.

*Optional at extra cost.

For, a long while ago, we graduated from the idea that a motorcar is merely a means of getting about.

The way you travel is pretty important too. The lift that's yours in knowing there's no prettier picture anywhere on the highways. The "kick" there is in a power plant that's lively and eager and always ready to get in on the fun.

The comfort that's found in all-coil springs, a husky, steady-traveling understructure, cushions that are deep and soft and wide enough to let you spread yourself a bit.

Even that extra swelling of the chest that comes from owning a car you know everyone respects and admires.

In a word—your happiness. It's never out of our mind in planning this car—nor in making very sure each dollar of cost gives you the greatest possible benefit.

That's why we rather proudly ask you to go see—and try—this Buick SPECIAL. It's priced like a six, in spite of the fact that like all Buicks, it's a big-powered Fireball valve-in-head straight-eight.

And we honestly believe that it puts a lower price tag on your motoring happiness than any other car you can buy today! See your Buick dealer and find out about that.

Virginia's Poll Tax

A good many misleading arguments have been thrown out to Virginia voters as they prepare to ballot today on poll-tax repeal. This newspaper has long opposed the poll tax as a qualification for voting. But some things are worse than the poll tax. One of them is the vague concoction that has been skillfully brewed up in the Campbell amendment. The net effect of this mass of technicalities would be to give the Legislature power to keep the restraints of the poll tax while doing away with it in name.

If voters approve the amendment to repeal the poll tax, they will write into the State constitution a requirement that voting registration books be closed 120 days before registration. This can hardly be anything but an effort to discourage voting. Present procedure involves prior payment of the poll tax, to be sure, but books are closed only 30 days in advance—and even then it is hard enough to arouse interest in elections. If the amendment carries, it also will give the Legislature authority to substitute a literacy test and such further requirements as it may provide. And although the Legislature could merely require annual voting as the means of accomplishing the annual registration the amendment sets up, it would be left free to impose any restraints it saw fit on registration.

The point has been made that Virginia would lose vital school funds if the poll tax were repealed later through Federal action. Why should school funds be raised through the poll tax at all? Here is a field in which the Legislature is entirely free to provide alternatives when and if an honest repeal measure comes along. Meanwhile, as they consider this phony repeal, Virginia voters ought to think twice before saddling themselves with something potentially a good deal more damaging than the poll tax.

Time For Fact-Finding

High officials are said to be prepared to recommend to President Truman that he set up a special fact-finding board to propose a settlement of the coal strike if there is no prospect of agreement by the end of the week. In our opinion, fact-finders should now be at work on the case. Hope that the strike could be settled through mediation has been meager for some weeks, and the emergency is growing ever more critical. Many communities are running out of coal for schools, hospitals and homes, and transportation on steam railroads is in danger of further curtailment. Time will be required for any group of fact-finders to make a report, and unless the miners consent to go back to the pits while this job is being done acute emergencies are likely to be felt in many communities.

It is assumed that the President will name a special board, as he did in the case of the steel dispute before the steel strike began, if that appears to be feasible. The advantages of a special board, from the President's viewpoint, are that it would by-pass the Taft-Hartley Act, which Mr. Truman is trying to get repealed, and would enable the board to bring in specific recommendations for settlement of the strike. The T-H Act specifically provides that emergency boards set up under its provisions shall avoid recommendations in their reports. This is one part of the law that ought to be revised.

Of course, the real difficulty with a special board is that John L. Lewis is not likely to cooperate with it. Such a board could be useful only if both the union and the operators would agree to resume mining for 60 days while the fact-finders were at work. Since Mr. Lewis has ranted about fact-finding boards in general and was sharply critical of the steel board, there is no reason to believe that he would voluntarily call a halt to the coal strike and leave the outcome to fact-finders. For that reason the President, if he should decide to intervene, would be under strong pressure to resort to the much-maligned Taft-Hartley Act.

It is well to remember that Congress never contemplated that resort to this section of the act should be postponed until our economy has begun to buckle. The President may act even before a strike has begun. The test is whether a strike or lockout in interstate commerce, "if permitted to occur or to continue, will imperil the national health or safety." Clearly Congress intended that national crises arising out of strikes and lockouts should be averted instead of being allowed to reach a disastrous climax. Because the act was aimed at threatened emergencies as well as fully developed emergencies, Congress limited the President to mild coercive powers. He may only name a fact-finding board and ask the courts to enjoin the strike or lockout for a total of 80 days. The law gives him no authority to seize the mines, the remedy favored by Mr. Lewis if the Government is to intervene at all, and it is unthinkable that Mr. Truman would resort to such a device in preference to the remedy that is spelled out in the law.

Acheson's Trip

Now that the French government has been reconstituted, the consultation between Messrs. Acheson, Bevin, and Schuman is in order, if only to iron out a few misunderstandings that appear to have arisen since the three ministers had their last consultation. They have to do primarily with Germany. The British seem to have a grievance over the conduct of Mr. John J. McCloy, the American High Commissioner. Mr. McCloy has been voicing his ideas over matters in Germany in a way that is making the British wonder whether he is acting in harmony with the State Department. They think that if the High Commission fails to act as a diplomatic unit of the Allies in concert, and if a separate approach is tolerated, the Adenauer government will play one member or one country off against the other.

There is something in this attitude. We say this even though we feel that Mr. McCloy has been making good sense in the opinions he has expressed on the problem of Germany. The difficulty, we suspect, arises over the lack of an inter-government policy toward the situation created by two Germanys. Since the establishment of what the London Economist calls Pieckestan (i. e., the East German Republic), a diversion has been provided for the West German Federal Republic at Bonn. Both are deploying their forces in the battle for German control. Surely, however, both Pieckestan and the effect of Pieckestan on Bonn must have been foreseen. The only trouble is that the effect has not yet been forestalled. The government under Chancellor Adenauer was bound to become the more nationalistic as the result of the establishment of a rival government. What was needed as an offset was to fit West Germany into Europe so that Bonn could look west instead of having to look east.

This is what Mr. McCloy realizes. He has proposed as an alternative to continuance of the industrial dismantling which is still in progress in western Germany that all the heavy industry in the Ruhr and neighborhood should become a joint responsibility of the territorial powers. It is a bold but not a new program. Here is how the economic integration of Europe could begin—by the creation of a vested interest in integration. Whether the program has the good will of the State Department is another matter. Mr. McCloy is responsible to the State Department, but, as we said the other day, in the nature of things he shares a function of leadership with the State Department. Whether the two are in step on this particular issue will probably be made known at the meeting of the Foreign Ministers.

Perhaps the conferees will have before them the views of Dr. Adenauer as well as those of Mr. McCloy. It is to be hoped so. The time has come to make a start on a problem which will solve itself in a way that is distasteful to the West if the West does not take the initiative. The people of Europe see the solution of Europe in terms of a federation or a confederation to include western Germany. They expressed themselves at the meeting of the Consultative Assembly of the Council of Europe. The resolutions to that effect went to the Committee of Ministers. But puffing and huffing are all that the committee can muster in dealing with the Assembly's resolutions. Perhaps Secretary Acheson may goad the ministers into a display of the supra-national statesmanship that the fast-moving scene of Europe requires. The German problem can be solved only on European lines.

Explosive Colombia

The mounting preelection violence in Colombia has brought yet another casualty in the resignation of Dr. Alberto Lleras Camargo as secretary general of the Organization of American States. Dr. Lleras, a former President of Colombia and a member of the Liberal Party, had issued a statement calling for a patriots' party to calm political passions before the November 27 presidential election. The Conservative Colombian government viewed this statement as a violation of Dr. Lleras' nonpartisan position, and its protest virtually forced his resignation. If the resignation is accepted, it must be counted a distinct loss, for Dr. Lleras has been an able exponent of Pan-Americanism.

The feeling for national unity which welded Colombia after the abortive Bogota revolt last year seems to have been shattered. At the root of the trouble is the fact that although Colombia has a Conservative President, Mariano Ospina Perez, the Liberals control Congress. This situation was the result of a split in the Liberal Party brought about by the candidacy of Jorge Eliecer Gaitan in the 1946 elections. Since the assassination of Gaitan in 1948, the Liberals have closed ranks and have indorsed the candidacy of Dario Echandia. The Conservatives meanwhile have nominated their longtime leader, Laureano Gomez. Senor Gomez, a man of reactionary views, is an admirer of Franco and fled to Spain after the Bogota revolt.

Highhandedness has been evident in both camps. For example, after the Liberals won a majority in the June congressional election, they withdrew from the national unity cabinet and organized Congress according to their own notions and in defiance of tradition. One of their slights was to refuse to rise when President Ospina Perez entered the chamber to open the session. The Liberals also are responsible for pushing through a law advancing the presidential election from June 1950 to this month in an effort to capitalize their majority. For their part the Conservatives have responded with like toughness. After the Liberals withdrew from the cabinet, President Ospina Perez worsened feelings by naming military men to the Ministries of Interior and Justice. These were later replaced with Conservative civilians, but the harm was done.

Tension now has been increased by the announcement of the Liberal candidate, Senor Echandia, that the party will not recognize the November election. Meanwhile, Senor Gomez has upset a plan advanced by President Ospina Perez and accepted in substance by Echandia, for postponing the election and instituting an interim civilian junta of both parties. By this act, Gomez seemingly ruled out any possibility of compromise. Thus a coup seems almost inevitable unless both parties show moderation. The bloodshed attending the Bogota revolt of 1948 ought to be a constant and horrible reminder of what can happen in such a situation.

Master And Pupil

The choice of Georgi M. Malenkov to make the anniversary speech in Moscow will focus attention on the 49-year-old party boss of the Communist Party. Malenkov is a Stalin disciple, having been reared under the generalissimo's tutelage, and has lately been regarded as the leading contender for the succession. Like Stalin, he has grown to power as the head of the party's personnel division, so that his brain is reputed to be "a huge card index of party members." Stalin had the same gift when he had the same position, and he got control of the ramified bureaucracy while the other members of the Politburo were endlessly intellectualizing about Communist dogma. That Stalin knew the possibilities of the position that Malenkov obtained is the best indication of the familiar relation between them.

In his Sunday speech Malenkov virtually admits that he is organizing a Greater Soviet Union. This activity is said to have been pushed by Marshal Tito's declaration of independence. Independence has a habit of spreading, and this is something that Stalin appears to fear more than anything else, so that he has ordered what is tantamount to incorporation of ready-to-swallow satellites. Curiously, it is not a Slav state, but Romania, that appears to be the leading candidate for the operation, though Bulgaria cannot be far behind.

Doubtless the job will be attended by the usual incantations that these countries have been selected because they are the most advanced in democracy. Elsewhere it will inspire wonder over the distance that the Stalinites have traveled. Stalin 30 years ago was a fierce proponent of autonomy; his disciple and possible successor is the instrument of imperialism.

Compton's Competence

It is distressing that Dr. Karl T. Compton has found it necessary to resign the chairmanship of the Research and Development Board while that vital agency is still in a difficult formative period. The strain of trying to harmonize military thinking with scientific thinking has told on Dr. Compton, and there is no doubt that his health now calls for a rest. He is a man of great conscientiousness, and his awarenes of imperfections in RDB operations sometimes weighed heavily on him. A measure of the way he has driven himself may be seen in the fact that he recently left his sickbed to fulfill a scheduled radio appearance.

When Dr. Compton came from the presidency of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology a year ago to succeed Dr. Vannevar Bush as research chief, the RDB's lines of authority were still not clear. Much of the job of supervising and coordinating military research is necessarily a process of trial and error. Dr. Compton has struggled against the compartmentalization inherent in the military establishment, and gradually relations have become smoother and RDB's functions more definite. Largely through Dr. Compton's insistence, the Joint Chiefs of Staff are now giving some guidance to research activities by way of direction and priority.

Dr. Compton's warning in his letter of resignation against "across-the-board" cuts in research funds contains a hint of pique over the manner in which Secretary Johnson has sliced the budget. True economy in research, of course, means that funds must be related to the job to be done. Dr. Compton also echoes the frustration of many scientists over "excessive checks and balances" which hamper research. Some of these controls are inevitable in something so big as the military establishment, but to the extent that they actually injure scientific output, they ought to be a matter of concern.

Dr. Compton has shown a unique ability to focus on main objectives, and he has given the Research and Development Board balanced and judicious direction. As this man who has given so much of his talent to public service takes a richly deserved rest, it is imperative that a successor be named without delay from the many qualified scientists available. For the President to leave RDB without a leader, as has been the case in the National Security Resources Board and for a shorter time in the Munitions Board, would be to undo much of the good work Dr. Compton has done.

Blanshard's Talk

Your editorial of November 1, "Religion in Politics" deplores the "dragging of religious issues into the arena of national politics," and indicates that this will encourage religious factionalism.

Several days ago, your paper devoted much attention to an anti-Catholic address delivered by Mr. Paul Blanshard before a handful of people in Alexandria. The address had no news value. It was merely a repetition of previous utterances by Mr. Blanshard, already made well known to readers of The Washington Post. If The Post really deplores the stimulation of religious controversy, should it not be consistent?

It is regrettable that a Catholic may not take a public stand against the deprivation of civil rights of children because they happen to attend a Catholic school without being accused of encouraging religious factionalism. GEORGE E. REED.
Washington.

An attack by Msgr. Edward L. Stephens on Paul Blanshard, author of American Freedom and Catholic Power, and on the sponsors of the recent meeting in Alexandria at which he spoke, is reported in The Washington Post of October 31. Monsignor Stephens' strictures are irrational to the last degree.

Mr. Blanshard has made a profound study of Roman Catholic leadership in America in a book which has received the highest praise of John Dewey, Henry Sloane Coffin, Daniel A. Poling, Charles Clayton Morrison and other eminent religious and lay leaders, and this book has been on the best-seller list for months.

In his talk at Alexandria, he subjected the political and social policies of the Roman Catholic hierarchy to a close scrutiny, basing all his assertions on official pronouncements of the hierarchy itself. Judging by Monsignor Stephens' violent reaction, it would seem that he would rather not have the teachings of his church generally publicized.

It ill becomes Monsignor Stephens to rebuke the members of the Alexandria Ministerial Association for an "unbrotherly" attitude, when all they seek is the equality of all religions under the American guarantees of religious liberty.

Denfeld's Responsibility

It is noted that the general tenor of press comment on the recent armed forces controversy and the congressional investigation in Washington has been to the effect that it was a struggle among the services for more power and money for their respective arms.

Admiral Denfeld was criticized for expressing views contrary to those held by the Secretary of Defense and the Secretary of the Navy, this action resulting in his dismissal from his position as Chief of Naval Operations.

In the law establishing the Office of Naval Operations, the Chief is charged with the responsibility for "the training of the fleet and its readiness for war." Any Chief of Operations worth his salt will inform his superiors and Congress when, in his opinion, steps are being taken that jeopardize the readiness of the fleet for war, regardless of whether these views meet with the approval or otherwise of his superiors. Naturally, he runs the risk of dismissal as did Admiral Denfeld.

A far more important feature of the investigation was the challenge given by naval officers to the views on methods for conducting the next war, especially those of the Air Force. This challenge was met with name calling, accusations of falsehood and of "disloyalty to unification." No facts were presented in rebuttal.

This is a question which involves not only the proper, or improper, expenditure of billions of dollars, but of the future safety of our Nation, and is one which merits the most serious consideration by Congress and the public. H. E. YARNELL.
Admiral, (U.S.N.) Retired
Newport, R. I.

Wallace Chickens

If not Post reporter John W. Ball, will an editor explain how the Wallace family's successful breeding of a hybrid chicken (which "threatens to increase egg yields by 20 to 50 percent" and "cut the cost of producing 'white meat' poultry as much as 50 percent") is a crime against the United States?

It seems to me the story in the same issue (November 4, inside page) of the four migrant babies who died of starvation in California is an example of crime.

JOHN ATKINSON.
Arlington.

Submarine Victims

Drew Pearson's "Washington Merry-Go-Round" column of November 4 states: "In World War I not a single American soldier was lost from submarine attack while crossing the Atlantic."

Except 213 lost when the Anchor liner Tuscania, carrying American troops, was sunk off Ireland by a torpedo on February 5, 1918. The convoy of which she formed a part was escorted by an American destroyer flotilla led by a British cruiser. H. E. OSANN.
Chillum, Md.

Revising Unification

On the front page of the October 27 paper, your article on Denfeld's ouster, Colonel Griffith states unification is a law of the land, meaning I suppose that one should obey and be loyal, whether it be right or not.

As a rebuttal to that and excuse for revision of an existing law, Mr. Truman's example of jeopardizing the Nation's economy, by not invoking the Taft-Hartley law in the labor dispute, because he disliked the law, is certainly a powerful argument. A law is an ordinance of reason, promulgated by the proper authority for the common good. It is just possible that the unification law as it now stands can be attacked on either the first or the last count.

The Rennies Answer Senator Murray

Would you permit us to comment on Senator Murray's communication of November 5 attacking our views on the Council of Economic Advisers?

1. We quite agree that the Employment Act, as passed by the Seventy-ninth Congress was "broad" and that "there are no limitations upon what may be accomplished under it except the views of the President, the Congress and the people." Or, as Senator Taft put it ". . . there is no longer any assurance of any kind pinned on the Government."

It is surprising, however, that the revised legislation was acceptable to Senator Murray. President Truman said that it "is not at all acceptable, and . . . does not accomplish any of the purposes sought."

2. Does the act give the council any specific function other than the making of its report? The law states that the council shall "gather timely and authoritative information concerning economic developments," which Senator Taft again summed up very nicely when he said that the CEA "will have the duty of studying economics, determining how the law shall be carried out, and making their report . . ." Whether these duties are "broad," as Senator Murray believes, or "vague," as we do, appears to be a matter of interpretation.

3. We were surprised, and we are sure that economists everywhere will be surprised to hear that there were no doctrinal differences between Chairman Nourse and Vice Chairman Keyserling.

All economists do not, however, share the Senator's high opinion of Mr. Keyserling. Howard Ellis, president of the American Economic Association, says that Mr. Keyserling's congressional testimony on inflation "can scarcely escape the charge of either befuddlement or dissimulation," and adds that "it is gratifying that the economics of Mr. Keyserling does not find its way into the 1949 report."

4. It is true, as we stated, that the council canont effectuate policy. As we also quite plainly stated, this is because of our constitutional division of powers, and has nothing to do with the legislation itself.

5. What is the council's proper function? We believe, as we stated in our article, that the advisers should be assistants to the President, with no independent voice of their own, and that the President should take full responsibility for the economic report.

Senator Murray attacks us strongly for this view, and reminds us that as a sponsor of the original bill he knows what was intended by its framers. May we refresh the Senator's memory? Speaking to the Senate on February 8, 1948, he described the proposed council in these words:

"The effect of this act, however, is to underscore the responsibility of the President, as the elected representative of the entire country, and as head of the executive branch of the Government. The council set up in this bill is entirely subordinate to the President. It has no independence nor autonomous authority. Its members, like other officials in the executive office, can be removed by the President at any time, and for any cause.

"The purpose of creating a Council of Economic Advisers is merely to provide additional assistance to the President in order to help him in discharging his responsibility. The successful operation of the council will depend not only upon qualifications of the men selected, but also upon their ability to cooperate with the President's other assistants and advisers."

We think no better statement of the council's functions has ever been made, and we are sorry Senator Murray has changed his mind.

We would, however, advise him for the future that when he accuses others of misinformation, he make very sure that he checks his source, including, if need be, his own statements of intention made on the floor of the United States Senate when it passed the Employment Act of 1946.

McCloy's Job In Germany

By Marquis Childs

Threat Or Bastion?

FRANKFURT, Germany.—If you sat down to devise the specifications of a job that would be difficult to handle to the point of impossibility, you could not come up to the task that has fallen to the lot of John J. McCloy. As High Commissioner for the American Zone of Germany, he has really taken on a tough one.

The new High Commissioner took over at a stage when the day-to-day decisions of the past were frozen into permanent policy. He followed Gen. Lucius Clay, who was so skillful and adroit that he usually escaped the blame for steps unpopular in America and Germany. A politician of extraordinary capacity, Clay had great skill in handling the American newspaper correspondents.

McCloy arrived in Germany as the suppressed forces of nationalism began to revive. Resenting the occupation, the Germans nevertheless claim the right to protection from the Russians. Berlin is a perilous island outpost that must somehow be fed and garrisoned with American money.

At precisely the same time, disillusion in America over German policy has reached a point of disgust. And there are two conflicting kinds of discontent at precisely opposite directions.

On the one hand are those who feel, with a great deal of reason, that the net results of American intervention in Germany is to restore to power the very industrialists who made possible Hitler's rise. Delbert Clark, who spent three years in postwar Germany for the New York Times, calls his recent book Again the Goose Step. The bitter critics of past blunders and deliberate intrigue are convinced that in continued dismantling of German industry is the only hope of preventing a new German war potential.

AT THE other pole are those, and among them many influential members of Congress, who believe that to strip Germany further is suicidal folly. They argue that 45,000,000 Germans in the west must earn their own way, that the American taxpayer cannot—and will not—go on pouring out money to sustain a dependent pople willing to work.

Even more extreme is the position of the American military. Top American military planners want to rearm West Germany as quickly as possible as a bastion against the East.

This is really only the beginning of the complication. The position of the other occupying powers must be considered.

France in recent weeks has been without a government and therefore it has been next to impossible to get any answer from Paris on any long-term issue. In the wake of devaluation, the British government has been nervously casting up its accounts and threatening the necessity of pulling back from costly responsibility in the Mediterranean and western Europe.

Yet both Britain and France have maintained an adamant position on dismantling. And there is to be considered in this connection the influence of French and British industry competitive with a revived Germany.

AS THOUGH this were not complication enough, McCloy was told that the occupation was living well beyond its budget and drastic cuts had to be made. Having to discharge a thousand employes, the new commissioner promptly discovered a curious psychology.

Hardly an American in Germany but will confide at the drop of a hat that he is here at great sacrifice and only as a patriotic duty. This tends to make for prima donnas reluctant to take orders. But, threatened with separation from the payroll and the privileges of occupation, most of these patriots sent up a loud wail.

They have vented their resentment against McCloy. Some of this has taken the form of mean and petty spite reflected in rumor and unpleasant innuendo printed at home.

This is far from being the total score of difficulties. The new government of West Germany has picked Bonn as a temporary capital. McCloy as a consequence must commute 90 miles between Frankfurt and Bonn, with frequent trips to Berlin and other West Zone centers. Members of the occupation staff moving to Frankfurt are faced with a desperate hunt for a place to live.

It has been hard to persuade able men to take responsible positions. Now, however, McCloy is assembling capable members of a new team who are learning to work together. Accepting the assignment with great hesitation, in the face of strong urging to return to a law practice that would have meant not less than $100,000 a year, the High Commissioner must find at times that all this adds up to nightmare.

As McCloy well knows, there is at this late date no quick and easy "solution" for Germany. Too many opportunities have been ignored or thrown away. But the American who has taken on this job deserves a lot of credit at the outset for being willing to shoulder a heavy and probably a thankless responsibility.

Negro Firemen Can Sue, Court Rules

In a 7 to 0 decision, the Supreme Court yesterday charged the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen with "a continuing and willful disregard" of rights the court previously had ruled "must be accorded" to Negro railroad firemen.

The case was one of three acted on yesterday which involve racial issues. The court agreed to hear two cases involving segregated higher education.

The firemen's case turned, legally, on whether the union could be brought into a District of Columbia Court. The high court held either the general venue statutes or the District statute could apply.

Obtain Injunction

The Negroes had obtained an injunction in District Court here against the union and three Southern rail lines, charging white firemen were displacing Negroes with greater seniority. But the United States Court of Appeals set aside the injunction.

Justice Jackson, for the court, pointed out that the union did not argue against the Negroes' complaint that they were deliberately being eliminated and would soon be entirely displaced. The railroads—Southern, Seaboard and Atlantic Coast Line—did not carry the appeal to the Supreme Court.

Jackson declared that the union, under the Railway Labor Act, must represent all members of the craft without discrimination yet the union is for whites only. He said the Norris-LaGuardia Antiinjunction Act does not render the Federal courts powerless to protect the Negroes' bargaining rights.

The court took the unusual step of ordering the injunction reinstated "forthwith." Justices Douglas and Minton did not take part in the case.

Segregation Cases

The two educational segregation cases involve G. W. McLaurin, a University of Oklahoma law student, and Heman Marion Sweatt, who has tried unsuccessfully to win admission to the University of Texas white law school.

McLaurin is fighting a ruling that requires him to sit in an anteroom and listen to school lectures through an open door of the regular classroom. Sweatt argues that a separate law school for Negroes is inferior to that for whites.

In an unusually busy day so early in the new court term, both new justices—Clark and Minton—read their first opinions. Both were tax cases, offering little if any of the jurists' philosophy. Justice Black dissented in the Clark opinion.

The Court:

1. Refused to consider vote fraud convictions against two Missouri election workers involved in the 1946 primary in which President Truman helped "purge" Representative Roger C. Slaughter.

2. Held, 8 to 0, that the American base in Newfoundland, one of those in the destroyers-for-bases swap, is foreign territory under one law passed by Congress, although it is a United States possession under another. Justice Jackson, in a concurring opinion, chided his colleagues for "inconsistency." He added, however, that "congressional incoherence of thought or of speech is not unconstitutional. . . ."

No Tax Deduction

3. Held, 7 to 0, that a Civil Service Coast Guard worker who served in the Coast Guard Reserve during the war is not entitled to the $1500 income tax deduction granted members of the armed forces. The case involved William I. Connelly, an employe of the Coast Guard's legal division here. He wore a commander's uniform but received only his Civil Service pay.

4. Denied hearings to two Little Rock, Ark., radio stations which have been fighting city privilege taxes on each station and on advertising solicitors. The court said no substantial Federal question was involved.

5. Upheld Pennsylvania's move to turn a Georgia prison escapee back to that State. A District Court ruling denying a habeas corpus writ now stands.

6. Held invalid a Wisconsin "emergency" tax when applied to property outside that State. Justice Black dissented in the 7-to-1 decision, written by Judge Clark.

7. Upheld a Washington State law compelling commercial loggers to reforest cut-over areas.

Long-Acting Morphine Shown To Surgeons at Convention

By N. S. Haseltine
Post Reporter

Atlantic City, N. J., Nov. 7.—Something new in pain killers, a prolonged action morphine, was introduced here today to the Nation's surgeons.

The drug is described as capable of giving full pain relief for periods up to 10 to 12 hours, in contrast to the normal 3-hour effects of regular morphine.

Though cautiously labeled only for its clinically tested values in postoperative surgery — the new morphine may be the forerunner of a 24-hour painkiller suitable in cases of inoperable cancers, its makers said.

Purposes Outlined

The drug, named "penni-morph," was introduced at the fourteenth annual convocation of the College of Surgeons. Some 2600 surgeons from all States, as well as many from foreign countries, are attending.

Three-fold purpose of the annual meeting was outlined here tonight by Dr. Curtis Lee Hall, Washington, D. C., orthopedic surgeon, who is completing his first year of a two-year term as president.

"We meet to examine and teach to others the latest findings in the field of surgery. Secondly, we work together as a force for furthering the good will and peace of all nations, and third, we meet to exchange knowledge of scientific research with foreign nations," he declared.

Papers To Be Submitted

World prominent surgeons who will deliver papers include Drs. Hans Finsterer of Vienna, Jose Soler-Roig of Barcelona, Paul Banzet of Paris, and P. T. Crymble of Belfast.

John P. Rasman, chemist, and the late Dr. O. G. Salb, both of Indianapolis, developed the morphine drug in its new form. Clinical reports by Drs. Lillian B. Mueller and Richard H. Russell of Indianapolis General Hospital said the new drug was not accompanied by some of the unpleasant side effects of regular morphine injections, notably mental depression and breathing irregularities.

Rasman explained the effect was prolonged because the morphine crystals were coated with fatty oils which delay assimiliation through resistance to body acids.

Renegotiation Law Upheld On War Contract Case Appeal

The Circuit Court of Appeals yesterday upheld the constitutionality of the Renegotiation Act as applied to war contracts made directly with the United States, if payment in full under the contracts had not been made when the act was passed.

In its ruling, the appellate court dismissed a petition filed by the Ring Construction Co., seeking a review of a Tax Court decision which had found excess profits of $1,208,965 in the construction of buildings at Camp McCoy, Wisc., during the war.

The work was done under two contracts with the War Department, the first of which—amounting to $6,836,412—was signed by the contractor on March 26, 1942, and approved by the War Department on April 24, 1942, four days before the enactment of the renegotiation statute. It did not contain a renegotiation clause.

The second contract, in the amount of $80,576, was executed on October 3, 1942. Construction was completed and the contract price paid in full before renegotiation, but after the effective date of the act.

Ring, in its petition, asserted the Renegotiation Act was not intended to be retroactive and, citing Fifth Amendment safeguards to property, declared it would be unconstitutional if so applied.

Rural Youth Guidance Code Outlined Here

Seven basic ideas which the Alliance for the Guidance of Rural Youth follows in its work were explained yesterday at an all-day conference held at National Education Association headquarters.

Dr. Ruth Strang, professor of education for Teachers College, Columbia University, told those at the conference that these ideas include the assumptions that rural communities need more effective guidance services; that they have resources for better guidance; that local communities may obtain aid from State and Federal sources; that the individual's own potentials should be utilized; that conditions that aid effective guidance must be fostered; that guidance begins before birth and extends to old age; and that the teacher is the key person in the guidance program.

During the conference, members heard specific guidance techniques discussed, and heard Dr. Daniel A. Prescott, director of the Child Study Institute at the University of Maryland, view practical attacks on guidance problems from a psychological standpoint.

Sherman Bars Crommelin Speech in Ala.

By the United Press

Adm. Forrest P. Sherman, new chief of naval operations, said last night he refused permission for Capt. John G. Crommelin to make a speech at Montgomery, Ala., because Crommelin wouldn't promise to steer clear of "controversial" matters.

Crommelin is the veteran naval aviator who faces possible court-martial for his role in forcing the service unification row into the open.

American Legion officials at Montgomery invited Crommelin to speak at Armistice day ceremonies there Nov. 11. The invitation was tendered early last month, before Crommelin was confined to the District of Columbia to await a decision on disciplinary action.

Sherman said he discussed the invitation with Crommelin and told him that he could accept if he gave his "word of honor" that his speech would not concern "controversial" matters—that is, the unification row.

"He didn't agree to that, and I wouldn't let him go," Sherman said.

He added that Crommelin "didn't feel he could make such a commitment, and I respected his reasons for feeling as he did."

But Sherman said, "I didn't think I could lift his restrictions and give him permission to go out and talk about controversial subjects while he is under suspension in connection with that very thing."

Crommelin declined to discuss the matter.

Roadbuilders Hold Contract Labor Best

Contractors joined yesterday with the American Federation of Labor and the United States Chamber of Commerce in criticizing road-building by Government-hiredday labor rather than by contract methods.

The criticism was voiced at the opening session of the fall conference of the American Road Builders Association at the Mayflower Hotel.

Archer B. Gay, secretary-treasurer, Virginia Road Builders Association, said the day labor system is "twice as costly" in that the project "usually costs more than if performed by private contractors" and also removes tax revenue from construction business.

Speaking for the AFL, Lewis G. Hines, legislative representative, declared that contractors "are specialists in the field of highway construction" and therefore can build roads and streets at "a minimum cost and maximum of efficiency."

"If contractors will be satisfied with a reasonable profit, they need have no fear of being driven out of business by increasing encroachment of day labor highway construction methods," Hines concluded.

Dr. George C. Smith, research economist, U. S. Chamber of Commerce, branded day labor "a part of the whole pattern of socialism in America" and declared "the battle against it is one of the many small battles that make up the war.

The conference continues today at 10 a. m. at the Mayflower.

DON'T BE SO MODEST

Just suppose Columbus had been too modest. Suppose Columbus had hesitated to set sail in only 3 little ships. Suppose he had put off leaving Spain until he could find a much larger investment than Queen Is could offer. No, Columbus didn't wait. He put his heart in his hat and went. So consider the future of those so dear to your heart. Remember—whenever thousands of people want to buy one thing all together for themselves, they can easily find enough money to buy it. So here is the chance of your lifetime—the opportunity to make that sound investment which will keep on bringing you and yours both security and profits throughout the rest of your lifetime—the investment that will assure a future for your children to inherit. The Z.Y.X. Research Center is now accepting pledges to finance an expedition whose purpose is to open unexploited areas for settlement and for using the untapped natural resources there. The Z.Y.X. Investors will share profits in proportion to their stock as soon as the colony is operating. This first colony will be composed of investors and families. D. C. Deposits Decline 1.5% In 10 Months

By S. Oliver Goodman

Deposits in Washington's 19 banks stood at $1,005,460,914 as of November 1, a dip of 1.5 percent since the start of the year.

The institutions revealed their deposit totals following an unexpected call for condition yesterday by the Comptroller of Currency and the Federal Reserve Board.

Although there was a decline of $14,734,873 since January 1, combined deposits as of November 1 were $14,464,429 ahead of the last previous call as of June 30.

Twelve of the local institutions displayed deposit gains since January 1, featured by a 33-million-dollar jump for National Bank of Washington. Stock control of the latter changed hands in April and Barnum L. Colton was made president. At that time rumors were prevalent here that John L. Lewis' United Mine Workers had purchased controlling interest in the bank, which is the oldest in Washington. Strict secrecy as to identity of the bank's purchasers has been maintained.

Gains of two to six million dollars in deposits since the first of the year were reported by Hamilton National Bank, American Security & Trust Co. and National Capital Bank.

Police Entry Rules Defined by Court

By John London
Post Reporter

Even when a policeman may legally force open a door without a warrant, he must first notify those inside "the purpose of his demand for entry," the Court of Appeals ruled yesterday.

Justice E. Barrett Prettyman, who wrote the opinion, concurred in by Justices Edgerton and Proctor, cited early English cases and "learned authors" dating back to the 15th century to support his decision which reversed a District Court ruling.

"It seems to us clear that from the early days of the common law the breaking of doors to make an arrest without a warrant was lawful only if necessary," said Judge Prettyman.

". . . Even where an officer may have power to break open a door without a warrant, he cannot lawfully do so unless he first notifies the occupants as to the purpose of his demand for entry."

Finding that police illegally forced open the door of Lawrence Accarino, 53, alleged numbers operator, at 1310 Downing pl. ne., last October 26, Judge Prettyman ordered District Court to grant a motion to suppress gambling evidence seized in the apartment, and to grant a new trial.

Accarino was sentenced in February by District Judge Henry A. Schweinhaut to 6 to 18 months in all and was fined $500.

Police had trailed Accarino for seven days, observed numbers slips in his car and watched him make the same rounds daily, Judge Prettyman stated. One operative placed a bet at one place on the route.

On the seventh day, plainclothes police followed Accarino into the Downing pl. apartment. Then, according to Judge Prettyman:

"The officers crossed the street and entered the apartment house door just about the time Accarino was at the top of the stairs to the second floor. They called to him; one testified that they called 'Wait a minute, police,' and the other said they shouted 'and told him that we were police'."

"The appellant (Accarino) entered his apartment which was to the right of the top of the steps, and closed the door. The officers knocked on the door and shouted at the appellant, one of them testifying that they called out 'Police'. The door not being opened, the officers broke it down."

Police, he said, found the suspect throwing paper into an envelope. They seized this and a pad and money in his pocket, then arrested him.

The Government contended this evidence was admissable because it was seized as an incident to a lawful arrest.

However, Judge Prettyman said the circumstances were similar to the McDonald "transom-peeping" case where the Supreme Court ruled last year that "no necessitous circumstances precluded the obtaining of a warrant before the arrest and search and that, therefore, the search was illegal."

The Supreme Court, in the McDonald case, reversed the gambling convictions of two Washington men arrested after police forced their way into a rooming house and discovered evidence by peeping over a transom.

Judge Prettyman quoted from this decision which declared that only "exceptional circumstances," such as exist in the case of police responding to an emergency, justify the absence of a search warrant.

Judge Prettyman further quoted the Supreme Court to the effect that:

"Power is a heady thing; and history shows that the police acting on their own cannot be trusted. And so the Constitution requires a magistrate to pass on the desires of the police before they violate the privacy of the home."

Cases where forced entries have been upheld althought police did not have a warrant concern "prevention of threatened crimes of violence and the quelling of disturbances of the peace," Judge Prettyman stated.

Further, he said, "There is no claim in the case at bar that the officers advised the suspect of the cause of their demand before they broke down the door. . . ."

Judge Warns 2 Witnesses at Gambling Trial

then "commended" Lewis' counsel, William J. Collins and Bernard Margolius, for minimizing their objections. Ford also was commended. Ehrlich asked for the mistrial on the grounds that the jury had been prejudiced against him by Judge McGuire's failure to include him in his commendations. His motion was denied.

A Colmar Manor, Md., carpenter, Sanford C. Zissler, testified that in the fall of 1948 he had installed a "one-way peephole" in a special door to the Stanton home.

He said that he was forced to cut through a "14-gauge" metal reinforcing plate" in the middle of the door to install the peephole. He said he had been instructed by Mrs. Stanton to install the peephole. Mrs. Stanton refused to answer any Government questions pertaining to this door, or the room into which it opened.

Zissler told the jury of nine men and three women that "the office" was a large, pine-paneled room with insulated, sound-proof ceiling, fluorescent lights, a water cooler and air-conditioning machinery.

Zissler testified that he had seen Lewis once in the Stanton home, but at a time before Lewis is accused of operating a lottery syndicate there.

Judge McGuire instructed the jury to leave the court at one point during the trial, when he was trying to get Olf to say who asked him to install the Stanton ticker. He then turned to the witness and said: "The court is the sole judge of whether or not a question might tend to incriminate you. This has been the law for 100 years, ever since Chief Justice Marshall presided at the treason trial of Aaron Burr.

Olf has been indicted for gambling by the same grand jury which indicted Lewis and the 13 defendants now on trial.

Olf did testify that Isadore (Shep) Shapiro, reputed gambler who died June 11, paid him $60 a week, personally, and in advance for the Stanton ticker."

Hitz asked Mrs. Stanton many questions about the three telephones he said U. S. deputy marshals found there when they raided the bungalow March 25, 1949. She testified that she knew of only two telephones. She said she had never known of any adding machines or tickers in the building. She said she had one phone for herself, and her daughter, Mrs. Marian Quantrille, had another for herself.

Mrs. Stanton described her home as containing a kitchen, dining room, living room and two bedrooms. But she declined to answer any questions concerning the room on the north side of the house.

The case resumes today at 10 a.m.

Man Held for Jury In Wife's Death

Mrs. Henderson died at Gallinger Hospital last Tuesday of gunshot wounds suffered during an argument at their home, 1416 Half st. sw.

Hollywood Scoop For Presswomen

By Richard L. Coe

PEOPLE: Hollywood's moving in with a scoop today for the writin' gals of the Women's National Press Club . . . Veep Dore Schary of M-G-M will be their guest at luncheon today (Statler) exactly five days before Louella Parsons has him on her radio sweep box; go to it, gals, don't let Lolly beatcha to the news . . . Schary, "I was a newspaperman once myself," will be brimming with "Battleground," having its premiere preview—new trick—at the Capitol tomorrow night . . . With the volatile writer who's beaten his way to the top of the movie world will be such folks as George Murphy, John Hodiak and Denise Darcel, who are among "Battleground's" lead . . . Anne Baxter will be along; in private life she's Mrs. Hodiak . . . Tomorrow night's invitation-only performance at the Capitol means that Peter Lawford will be going through his jitterbugging only twice . . . The film will be preceded by a buffet-reception at the Willard for Maj. Gen. Anthony C. McAuliffe, whose "Nuts" reply to the German demands for surrender made history at Bastogne and inspired the picture . . . Tonight at 10 on WMAL, General Auliffe will present an Army citation to Schary for the film on the Department of Defense's weekly radio program airing from Lisner Auditorium.

LETTER-WRITERS discouraged at our prospects of getting a theater should take heart . . . ANTA, its construction advisers and lawyers, are working on the plan to lease the Belasco from the Government and the future looks promising . . . The various campaigns aimed at getting theater back here have decidedly had their effect, so don't feel all efforts haven't been appreciated . . . Doubting Thomases can call ANTA in New York (LU. 2-2666) or talk to Gilbert Miller if they think the matter's been dropped . . . 'Tain't so.

JOEY ADAMS is counting the royalties on the second printing of his second book, "The Curtain Never Falls" (Frederick Fell, N. Y., $3.) . . . Between shows at the Capitol with Peter Lawford, Comedian Adams smiles proudly at the Brentano window, plugging his novel. . . . It's a character study of a popular comedian and not a nice guy, either. . . . Though the writing isn't extraelegant, the background is strikingly authentic, taking the egocentric "hero" from vaudeville's collapse through burlesque, the borscht circuit, night clubs, Hollywood, Long Island and radio. . . . You find yourself wondering just which of our happy hearts Joey had in mind, for he mixes the factual with his narrative.

HELEN HAYES returns to radio next Sunday from New York's Belasco, playing Noel Coward's "Still Life," with David Niven as her leading man and under the Theater Guild of the Air banner.

AL SHERMAN points out that the New York papers have been calling Gotham's "Passport to Pimlico" run the "American Premiere" . . . The picture opened at our Playhouse first, points out Al, "So what are we in the District, Burgundians?" . . . Gordon Hittenmark, who put dollhouses on our Christmas map, plotting a television show . . . Joe Hardy, a frequent Olney player, opens tonight at Baltimore's Maryland Theater in "The Respectful Prostitute," the Sartre play about the Yank South . . . The National holds "The Red Danube" for a second week.

HOLLAND'S celebrated stage star, Charlotte Koehler, will be one of the week's visitors . . . Rudy Vallee, the college man who turned out to be one of the smartest men ever to get into show business, piling in the customers at the Shoreham's Blue Room . . . The Sadler Wells ballet people being feted between three performances at Constitution Hall: Mr. and Mrs. Aubrey Neil Morgan of the British Embassy and Mr. and Mrs. John Duncan Miller, he of the Times of London, feted the stars last night, as did America's Marion Venable . . . Tonight it's a posh do at the Embassy . . . Thence to Richmond, for which Mrs. Stabler's agency in Jordan's has arranged a convoy of buses.

SECRETARY OF DEFENSE Louis Johnson will make the "Personality of the Year" presentation to Al Jolson for the Variety Club's Tent No. 11 on Saturday night, November 19, at the Statler . . . Dr. Fred Salisbury Tupper, professor of English literature at G. W., has an interesting article on "Shakespeare in the Nation's Capital" in the current issue of the university's Victory Council bulletin . . . For your advance Christmas shopping list, write yourself a note about the new Decca Album, not yet out, "Album of Stars." . . . Benefiting ANITA, this will present some great stars in famous scenes: Helen Hayes in "Victoria Regina," the Fredric Marches in "Years Ago" and "The Skin of Our Teeth," John Gielgud in "Richard II" and Eva LeGallienne in "Hedda Gabler." . . . Pierce Hall has begun its Sunday night series of out-of-the-way films, held in the auditorium of the Unitarian Church, 16th and Harvard, Sunday nights at 7:30.

WADE PEARSON was elected chief barker of the Variety Club, Tent No. 11, at elections held yesterday . . . Other new officers include: Morton Gerber, first assistant chief barker; Jerry Adams, second assistant chief barker; Glen Norris, property master; Sam Galanty, treasurer . . . The following men will join the officers on the board of governors for 1950: Carter T. Barron, Sidney Lust, Sam Roth, George A. Crouch, Leon Makover and Alvin Q. Erlich.

"MY BLESSINGS WITH THEE": Polonius bids his son Laertes farewell as Ophelia looks on in the Laurence Olivier production of "Hamlet," returning to the Little screen tomorrow. The players are Jean Simmons, Felix Aylmer and Terence Morgan

China Reveals Purchase of Surplus Bombers

Chinese officials said yesterday the Nationalist government has bought a "few" surplus American Army B-25 bombers which will be flown soon across the Pacific.

The planes were bought with Nationalist funds, officials said. The 125 million dollar American arms aid fund voted the Nationalists last year has all been spent.

A Hongkong report said that Madame Chiang Kai-shek, wife of the Nationalist generalissimo, had bought 100 of the B-25 twin-engine bombers in this country. Chinese officials said the actual purchase was "just a few" and declined to disclose the number involved.

Whelchel Leaves Redskins—DeOrsey Has His Way

This Morning

—With Shirley Povich

WELL, THAT was a racy five years, what? Doesn't seem like a day over seven weeks ago that Admiral Billick Whelchel launched himself on a five-year trip as head coach of the Redskins, armed with a contract from George Marshall, and here he is, dropping anchor already. Trip's over.

The evidence is that Whelchel finished last in the tugging and hauling between Marshall and Indignant Stockholder Leo De Orsey, the club's tax attorney, who was loudly demanding changes in the coaching setup. The fact that Whelchel had been a rear admiral, anyway, may be pertinent to where he finished in the inner office bickering.

POVICH

Marshall owns 55 percent of the team and Whelchel was his choice as head coach, which may cause some wonder how De Orsey, whose shares do not run beyond 20 percent, could lay down the ultimatum. But apparently Marshall found it more convenient, if not easier, to unload a head coach than a tax attorney in these days when a big operator hesitates at blowing his nose until he ascertains if it is deductible.

De Orsey said it flatly—he'd pull out of the Redskins' organization unless there was a new coaching arrangement. Tough talk by a minority man, but he won out.

ONLY A WEEK ago, on November 1, Coach Whelchel told a reporter: "I will not walk out on the Redskins. Football means too much to me for that." Did he fall or was he shoved? The Redskins announced it was by "mutual agreement" that his contract was canceled. The fact that the Redskins won only three of their first seven league games under Whelchel apparently expedited the agreement.

It was with an exaggerated sense of triumph, anyway, that Marshall announced last year that his new head coach would be Whelchel, who was retiring from the Navy with the rank of vice admiral. Whelchel was a green pea in pro football, and had coached his last college team five years before, but Marshall introduced him as a sure-fire miracle man with the Redskins.

Marshall gave Whelchel a five-year contract as if to justify his selection. The immediate wonder was why an admiral would trade off his high Navy rank for the doubtful pleasure of being a Redskin coach. There had been unhappy Redskin coaches before him, and the authority of Redskin coaches since Ray Flaherty always has been suspect.

MARSHALL IS QUOTED as saying of Whelchel, "He had a tough time. A bad press put him under fire." Whelchel had a tough time all right, but he was under the gun, and not from the press, from the moment he inked his agreement to work for Marshall. He didn't even get the first concession usually given a new head coach—the privilege of picking his own assistants. De Orsey made that charge.

Marshall, who is all-American in certain respects, is not quite esteemed for his football genius. When Whelchel moved in, Marshall surrounded him with the same stooges who have been part of the Redskin picture for years. He put Whelchel on the spot before the season opened by boasting of the material he was giving the coach to work with, even while the coach was frankly admitting "we may be a couple of years away from being a good team."

It's Marshall who decides what playing talent is signed by the Redskins, and his selectivity on that point hasn't been good. As one successful coach in the league has said of the Redskins, "the Redskins won't be much team as long as Marshall picks the draftees. He's a good promoter and sells a lot of season seats. He ought to stick to being a ticket man, not a football man."

THE NAVY DIDN'T quite condition Admiral Whelchel for the job as coach of the Redskins despite Marshall's acclaim for him as "a leader of men." That, Whelchel undoubtedly was, with a superb combat record as skipper of an aircraft carrier. But he came into pro football as a green pea and discovered it vastly easier to order an exec. officer to get up headway than it was to get the same results from the Redskins.

When the admiral did get out of the Redskins job, it was with colors flying. He went out on the shoulders of his athletes who carried him off the field as their final salute to a guy they all liked, after making his farewell game a winning one. That, it may be noted, has never happened to a club owner.

However, Marshall cannot be ignored no matter what the temptation may be. When he signed Whelchel, it was the newest self-aggrandizement of a man who already owned a Hollywood wife, a chauffered car, a pro football team and now became the only civilian with a naval aide. And now he gets a half with President Truman, as the only other contemporary civilian to unload an admiral.

Nats on Verge Of Making 'Swell Deal,' Harris Says

The Nats are on the verge of making "what we think is a swell deal," Manager Bucky Harris disclosed at the Touchdown Club yesterday.

"It's on the fire now, and it's red hot," said Harris," and that is all I can tell you."

The Nats' new manager made the statement in an off-the-cuff interview following his speech-making appearance before Touchdown Club members and guests.

From the speakers' table, Harris declared "I'm happy to be home again, and I'm sure you'll like Irv Noren, the outfielder from Hollywood who was the most valuable player in the Coast League. I recommend him.

"We have plans to improve the Washington team, but the difficulty so far has been getting other clubs to agree with them. But I've never had an eight-place club and I don't intend to start next season."

There was a hint that the Nats were dealing in the direction of the New York Yankees. They have admitted sounding out the Yankees in a trade involving Second Baseman George Stirnweiss, and there are reports that trade-talk has expanded to include several players in the same swap.

Harris did say flatly that Pitcher Ray Scarborough was not involved in any of the discussions.

"We have first choice in the draft, you know," he said, "and I'll be at Baltimore when the draft meeting opens November 17. A pitcher will be the first man I'll try to grab.

Cooper, Titone Fight to Draw In Third Battle

Jimmy Cooper, Washington's little buzz saw, staged a late rally to gain a draw with Brooklyn's Charlie Titone last night at Turner's Arena.

Refree Ray Bowen voted for Cooper. Judge Ben Alperstein voted Titone and Judge Joe Bunsa called it a draw.

It was the third bout for the two; Cooper won the first by a decision five weeks ago, but Titone, a good little featherweight, knocked out the local boy in six rounds two weeks ago.

Cooper, weighing 125½ to Titone's 125, rushed out at the opening bell, but Titone met him with a hard left to slow him a bit. Titone was taking most of Cooper's blows on his arms and shoulders until the last two rounds.

Up until the eighth round Titone was always able to control Cooper, spinning and pushing Cooper about but Cooper still had enough steam left for the late round surge which gained him the draw.

Both boys were still going strong at the finish but Cooper was coming on while Titone was losing ground.

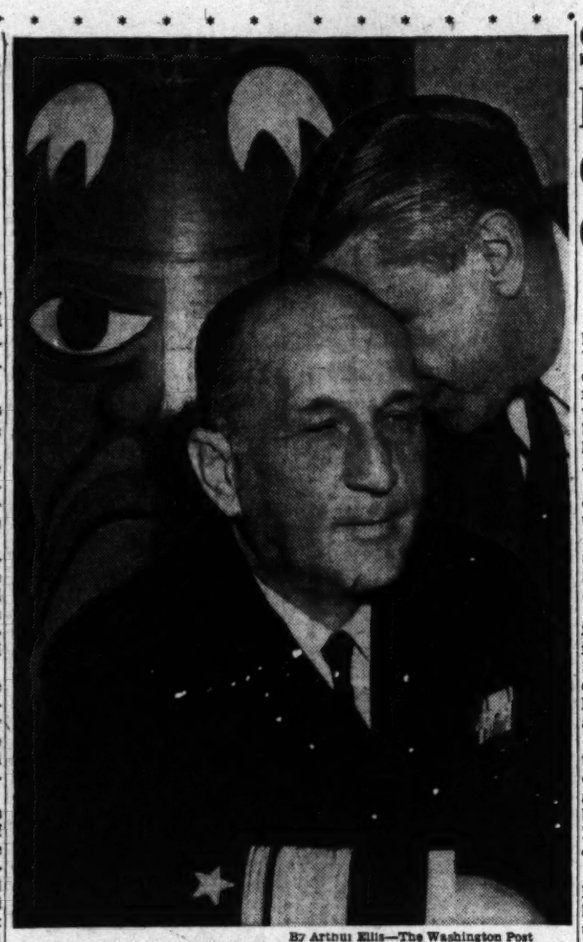
In a wild semi-final, Walter Hamm, ended Pat Thomas' string of seven straight wins since turning pro by taking an unanimous decision from the former Golden Gloves champ. Hamm weighed 134 to Thomas' 133½.

A crowd of 1338 paid a gross of $2616.80 and a net of $1964.55.

The preliminary results:

Jimmy Briscoe, 147, Washington decisioned George Sherron, 148, Alexandria in the opening four. The second four went to Scott Richardson, a Washingtonian who packs 161 pounds on a 6-foot, 2-inch frame, over Baltimore's Billy Richardson, a 157½ pounder, only 5 foot, four inches tall.

Jimmy O'Brien, 150, Baltimore, TKO'd Billy Hickerson, 145, Washington, after 2:59 of the second round and Kid Saucer, 179½, Washington, decisioned Jimmy Ward, 181, Camden, N. J., in the final four-rounder.



By Arthur Ellis—The Washington Post

FROM VERY BEGINNING—The Indian sign, with an evil eye looking over his shoulder, was on Admiral Billick Whelchel from the day he signed a contract to coach the Washington Redskins. This picture was taken in February with President George Marshall whispering into Whelchel's ear, when they came to terms in Marshall's office. Whelchel's resignation yesterday ended this troubled relationship

'The Great Agganis' Next for Maryland

CAN MARYLAND STOP "The Great Agganis" and his Boston University teammates Saturday?

That is one of the principal questions this week in The Washington Post's Pick-The-Winners football contest.

Each week the winner of the contest will receive two tickets to the Army-Navy game in Philadelphia, November 26, and an all-expenses-paid trip to this game for two persons.

The Washington Redskins' fifth head coach in the last seven years, Vice Admiral John (Billick) Whelchel, (USN ret.) became another former coach yesterday when it was announced, suddenly and very briefly, that his 5-year contract had been cancelled "by mutual agreement."

Herman Ball, line coach, was elevated to Whelchel's post "for the balance of this season."

That was the extent of the Redskins' announcement and all demands for details were met with a firm "no comment."

Whelchel's retirement, after being carried triumphantly from the field following the Redskins' 27-14 victory over Pittsburgh Sunday, could be counted as no surprise to Redskin Stockholder Leo DeOrsey and Redskin players.

DeOrsey, one of the club's attorneys, opened a campaign for a change in coaches two weeks ago after the Washington pros were battered by the Philadelphia Eagles.

"A Change or I'm Out"

Last week, after a tie with the New York Bulldogs, he renewed his campaign and gave out the ultimatum: "If there is no change in the coaching set-up, I'm out." He said he had offered to sell his stock to President George Marshall, or buy out Marshall's majority share of the club.

Redskin players learned that Whelchel was leaving Sunday when he expelled all outsiders from the dressing room at halftime and told the team, "This is my last game as coach of the Redskins. I'd like to win this one."

To fans the latest Redskin maneuver was the signal for wild guessing over whether the former Annapolis coach was fired or quit, and over who would succeed Ball in 1950 if the latter's status is temporary.

Many Redskin rooters, and at least one club official, expected Ray Flaherty to be recalled to the job he left in 1943 to take a Navy commission.

There also was renewed speculation over the chances of Frank Leahy, Notre Dame's T-formation expert, taking the position he is reported to have turned down shortly before Whelchel was signed last February.

Big Publicity for Whelchel

Whelchel came to the Redskins in one of the fanciest publicity buildups of all time. The name of the coach who would replace Turk Edwards was kept a deep secret until every newsman within miles was gathered at the Redskin office. It was hinted that the new coach was the "greatest thing ever to happen to pro football."

Under the leadership of Whelchel, the Redskins had a record of three won, three lost and one tied. But this was marked up with material Marshall had called the best of all time.

It was a distinct handicap under which the former Western High and Navy quarterback took over the local National Football League representatives. Although he was head coach at Navy in 1942 and 1943, beating Army both years, he had never coached a pro team and he had never coached the T-formation to which the Redskins were committed.

He was popular although strict with his players. He had several run-ins with the press. While he was head coach he handled the club to suit himself, despite suggestions from Marshall.

At his Virginia Beach home yesterday, he indicated he was through with coaching at the age of 51. He said, "I have retired to enjoy life," perhaps hoping to gain back the 20 pounds he lost during his work with the Redskins.

Spartans Lose, Gain in Poll

New York, Nov. 7 (AP).—Notre Dame so completely dominates the top 10 college football ratings that even losing to the Irish moves a club up the ladder.

Michigan State, a shadowy tenth last week, hopped to eighth in the sixth weekly Associated Press rundown in which 163 sports writers and sportscasters participated.

There were no shakeups in the ratings with Notre Dame still way out front on 137 of the 163 first place votes.

Minnesota and Virginia are the only newcomers, displacing beaten Baylor, which lost its first game to Texas, 20-0, and Southern Methodist, held to a surprising 27-27 tie by Texas Aggies.

The total vote with points figured on a 10-9-8-7-6-5-4-3-2-1 basis (first-place votes in parenthesis):

1. Notre Dame (133)	1378
2. Army (13)	1144
3. Oklahoma (9)	1108
4. California (3)	943
5. Michigan	605
6. Cornell (1)	500
7. Rice	467
8. Michigan State	225
9. Minnesota	200
10. Virginia	199

The second 10: 11, Ohio State, 188; 12, Southern Methodist, 97; 13, Texas, 90; 14, Kentucky, 79; 15, Boston University, 66; 16, Louisiana State, 44; 17, Stanford, 39; 18, Wake Forest, 33; 19, College of Pacific, 30; 20, Santa Clara, 28.

Others receiving five or more votes—Maryland, 25; Wyoming, 20; Dartmouth, 18; North Carolina, 16; Baylor, 12; Illinois, 8; Duke, 7; Villanova and Wisconsin, each 6.

Snead Named Golfer of Year

Chicago, Nov. 7 (AP).—Slammin' Sammy Snead, who barely missed scoring a grand title slam, was selected the golfer of the year in a Nation-wide poll conducted by the Professional Golfers' Association of America.

Runner-up to Snead was the man who beat him out of golf's most coveted crown, National Open Champion Cary Middlecoff.

Fed Up With Pressure

Why Whelchel Quit

A READER of The Washington Post called in yesterday with a question which may be bothering a lot of Redskin rooters.

"Why," he asked, "did Admiral Whelchel quit as the Redskins' head coach?"

This is the substance of the answer he got:

Whether Whelchel quit or was fired, he was no doubt fed up with the pressure on him for victory from the press, fans and even officials of the club.

He said when he took over the head coaching job that Quarterback Harry Gilmer and other "hot" rookies wouldn't set the league on fire in their first year. He repeated this almost to the day he left the club . . . that it would take time to develop the Redskins into a winning team.

But the demand was for immediate victories.

If Whelchel quit, he simply decided the job wasn't worth the beating he would have to take for two or three years before he hoped to field a championship team.

Who Is Herman Ball?

New Redskin Coach T-Formation Expert

WHO is Herman Ball?

The quiet-spoken, friendly guy who stepped into one of the most controversial jobs in Washington yesterday, as head coach of the Redskins, is a man who has devoted his life to football.

The T-formation is his special forte.

The highest respect for his ability has been expressed by Clark Shaughnessy, T-formation mastermind under whom Ball worked while the system was being installed in the Redskin offense.

Ball, now 39, first gained national notice in 1933 when he starred at guard on a Davis-Elkins, W. Va., eleven which led the country's colleges in scoring.

After college he moved to Cumberland, Md., and took over the Allegany High team which was undefeated in 1936, 1941, and 1942. One of his grid students was Tommy Mont, a present member of the Redskins. In all his Allegany teams won 56, lost 13 and tied one.

Herman Ball

In 1943 Ball became an assistant coach at the University of Maryland, where he served under Doc Spears, Paul Bryant and Shaughnessy during three seasons. During his tenure at Maryland he also acted as a scout fo rthe Redskins, finally resigning in 1946 to devote his full time to scouting for the Washington pros.

THROUGHOUT the past three seasons he has helped with the coaching during the week, on weekends traveling to observe the Redskins' next opponent.

Only recently, Ball was named line coach when Turk Edwards took over his executive vice president's job. For the last two Redskin games he has acted as observer from the stadium roof.

Ball is the Redskins' sixth head coach in seven years, but the fact worries him very little.

"There isn't much pressure on me," he said yesterday.

'Mikan-apolis' Caps' Foe at Uline Tonight

George Mikan and the Minneapolis Lakers invade Uline Arena at 8:30 tonight for a National Basketball Association game with the Caps.

Both teams are undefeated after two NBA games this season. The Lakers own decisions over the Philadelphia Warriors and the Baltimore Bullets while the Caps have downed the Bullets and the St. Louis Bombers.

Mikan, a 6-foot-10-inch center, shattered all scoring points last season when he scored 1698 points in the 60-game season for a 28.3 average.

Cap Coach Bob Feerick, will alternate Chuck Harbert, John Mandic, Jack Nichols and Chuck Gilmur in guarding the bespectacled former DePaul star.

The other end of the Lakers, one-two scoring punch is Jim Pollard, 6-6 forward, who was selected to the BAA first team last year along with Mikan.

The Lakers defeated the Caps, four games to two in the final round of the old BAA championship playoffs last year. The Caps, however, won four of the five games played at Uline during the year.

Two Catholic Youth Organization teams will play a preliminary game at 7:15 p. m.

Unbeaten Virginia Rated 6th In Williamson Grid System

Unbeaten Virginia not only blasted out a 26-14 upset victory over Pennsylvania Saturday, but the Cavaliers also crashed into the System's First Ten, moving up to sixth place.

Maryland, beaten only by Michigan State in six starts, is rated sixteenth, 26 places higher than Harry Agganis' unbeaten Boston University team whom the Terps meet in Boston Saturday.

Art Guepe and His Virginia Aides

By Morris Siegel
Post Reporter

WHEN ART GUEPE exclaimed, "Oh, my achin' back" in Philadelphia Saturday he wasn't simply using a trite expression. The Virginia football coach meant it.

Hundreds of deliriously happy Virginia alumni, celebrating the Cavaliers' 26-14 upset of Pennsylvania, converged on Guepe's suite with back-slapping congratulations.

Most of the old grads weren't simply patting their youthful head coach. They were rapping him hard, almost as hard as the Virginia linesmen had rapped the Quakers that afternoon.

BEAMING and as happy as any of them was Guepe. He said thanks to all, the alumni who were with the team in losing days as well as the fair-weather celebrants.

"Please let me say something," he fairly shouted. "Don't toast me for today's victory. It was a team victory, the greatest team victory I have even seen.

"If you want to praise someone on the coaching staff, praise the assistant coaches—Ned McDonald, Butch Slaughter, Frank Thorsey and Al Guepe (Art's twin brother). They did a helluva job. They made it possible.

"I WAS worried—plenty worried — that our lighter line wouldn't be able to hold those big Pennsylvania linemen, but McDonald, our line coach, kept telling me: 'Don't worry, Art, they will!'

"I was also worried how Johnny Papit would react to the new role we had groomed him for—blocking, principally, instead of running. Brother Al assured me Papit not only didn't mind, but that he would be a terrific blocker. He was, making it possible for Whitey Michels to pass as successfully as he did.

"And what a masterful job of scouting old Butch Slaughter did. That guy should have been a detective.

"HE TOLD us what Penn would do in every circumstance and, by gosh, they did it so perfectly that you'd have thought Slaughter coached them."

The alumni cheered the little speech, but they cheered Guepe even louder. After all, he was the first coach in 59 years to guide the Cavaliers to a victory over Penn.

And that's something, brother.

This Time It's Coaches (Plural)

This week The Washington Post makes it plural—"Coaches of The Week"—instead of honoring only one coach.

The "Coaches of The Week" are the entire staff of the University of Virginia, for outstanding achievement in scoring Virginia's first victory over Pennsylvania last Saturday.

Bat Girl Triumphs At Pimlico

By Walter Haight
Post Reporter

Pimlico, Md., Nov. 7.—H. S. Horkheimer's Bat Girl, who has been stopping when sent out to set the pace and failing to get up when ridden from behind, struck a happy medium today. Happy was the word for it, too, for those scattered backers who struck gold to the tune of an $18.40 win mutuel.

Jockey Willie Downs kept Bat Girl under a rating ride in fourth position, then put her to a drive and she was up in the final test. A neck away was J. A. McKenna's Jacolee and another neck back was Jack Jenkins, jr.'s Eternal Dream in the field of 11.

With Mrs. Gustave Ring's Ringador, the favorite, among the also rans, Bat Girl was clocked in 1:12 2/5 for the 6 furlongs over a fast track. A crowd of 9500 watched the program.

Apprentice Samuel Boulmelis added to his growing list of winners here the filly Elope. Carrying the colors of P. T. Connors, the daughter of Heliopolis took command swinging into the stretch and staved off a closing drive of Mrs. Albert Sabath's I Predict. The winner paid $5.60.

A favorite and a longshot team to produce a $270.60 payoff on the 8-and-7 combination in the daily double. Maria De Resto's Clusiana came from far back to take the opener while Hard To Get, owned by L. A. Startling of Washington, lasted to take the second, paying a healthy $59.40 to win.

White House Assistant Tells of 'Disaster' in Tragedy of Airliner

STORY: It was a week ago today that Robert M. Field, a former White House employe, put in a call from New York to Lela Stiles, a White House assistant. Their conversation went like this:

"Hello Lela, I just got back from Europe and I'll be down in Washington tomorrow and I want you to know that I'm bringing disaster."

"You're bringing what?"

"I'm bringing disaster."

"What's this all about—what are you talking about?"

"Disaster—that's the name of the French perfume I promised to bring you. Don't you remember? The literal translation of the French name of the perfume is 'Death to All Good Men.' Isn't that disaster?"

The next morning Field hurried to the New York airport to catch a plane for this city. He had arranged appointments with ECA officials here and he wanted to be sure to get the plane on which he had a reservation. He called the Eastern Air Lines to say he might be late but to be sure to hold the plane until he got there. The plane was delayed a few minutes until Field arrived, the last passenger aboard.

An hour later the plane was rammed by a P-38 as it was about to land here. Field and 54 others were killed in history's worst airline disaster.

Man Seized On Charge of Death Threat Extortion

Wrote He Would Kill If Not Paid, FBI Says; Wife Holds He Tried To Expose Collusion

A Washington man, a wartime aircraft parts inspector for the Government, was arrested by the FBI yesterday, charged with writing two extortion letters demanding a total of $225,000 under threats of death.

Roth

His wife here immediately announced that the letters were a "desperate" device to bring to public attention an alleged wartime collusion between aircraft manufacturers and Air Force officials that cost the Government 6 million dollars in defective parts. She said he never had any intention of killing anyone.

She said the alleged collusion not only cost the Government and taxpayers money, but also sent defective aircraft parts overseas to menace lives of fliers. She also declared her husband had "proof" of inefficiency and dishonesty, including a day-by-day diary.

The man arrested is Joseph Robert Roth, 40, of the Park Central Apartments, 1900 F st. nw., who recently resigned as a salesman for an office equipment firm.

Rita Roth, 34, is a secretary in the Economic Cooperation Administration.

Those receiving the letters, the FBI said, were Sherman Fairchild, 53, of New York City, chairman of the Board of Fairchild Engine & Aircraft Corp., from whom he demanded $200,000; and A. J. Eckhardt, of Baldwin, Long Island, now an attorney for the corporation.

Eckhardt, Mrs. Roth said, was an Army major in the war and Roth's superior in the Government inspection system at the Fairchild plant. Roth demanded $25,000 from Eckhardt, FBI reported.

The FBI said that both letters were signed with Roth's name, and demanded that the money be forwarded to him in Washington by next Friday, Armistice Day. If it was not, the letters said, Roth threatened to go to New York and kill both men by Christmas.

Roth was scheduled for arraignment today before United States Commissioner C. S. Lawrence.

Mrs. Roth said her husband reported collusion in 1945 and the Air Force began an investigation. This was subsequently dropped, she said, and her husband was transferred.

At Divorce Hearing

Husband Tells How He Caught Wife, Other Man in Hotel Tryst

JOHNSTON STEWART
Accuses wife of hotel tryst

BETTY ANN STEWART
Charges husband with cruelty

An evening of Washington wife-trailing, climaxed in Room 919, Mayflower Hotel, was graphically described yesterday in District Court by a former congressional legal adviser seeking a divorce on adultery grounds.

It was only nine months after his marriage, Johnston Fraser Stewart, 39, testified, that he and a private detective entered the room to find his blonde wife, Betty Ann Stewart, 38, with another man—the latter clad only in a garment which reached "to the top of his stomach."

James H. Higgins, Chicago businessman, is named as co-respondent in the suit. Mrs. Stewart, who lives at The Croydon, 1815 17th st. nw., also has filed divorce action against her husband, charging cruelty.

Stewart, a lean and lank man formerly an attorney on the staff of the Joint Labor Study Committee, testified that on June 17, 1948, he telephoned his wife that he was leaving for an out-of-town trip on Capitol Hill business.

But instead of leaving, he said, he and Private Detective Perry Bonner took up a position at 5 p. m. where they could watch Mrs. Stewart where she worked as hostess in a model home at Pennsylvania and Constitution aves. nw.

At 9:15 p. m. they trailed her to her apartment, he said, where she stayed a half hour.

"She bounced out then, dressed up fit to kill," Stewart, a Columbia University graduate, said. 'High heel shoes, very much with what you would call a 'party festive air.'"

Along with Bonner and two detective aides, he trailed her then to the Mayflower, Stewart said, where shortly after midnight husband and shadows were standing in the corridor outside Room 919.

Bonner, he said, gave a commanding knock on the door and said:

"Higgins, this is the house detective. I have just learned that you have a woman in there. Now get her out of there and out in a hurry . . . or I'm coming in!"

Said Stewart: "I had my ear down close to the door hoping I might hear something. I heard Higgins say, 'Now get dressed and get the hell out of here.'

"It seemed a long time . . . the night latch flipped . . . the knob started to turn almost imperceptibly. In that split second Bonner jammed his toe in—then all four of us put concentrated pressure on the door and it flew inward."

His wife's first reaction, Stewart said, was one of "great righteous indignation," as she demanded, "Just what is the reason for this intrusion?"

"Then she saw me," the husband testified. "She was crestfallen . . . she turned white."

Stewart said he then "diverted my attention to an individual who up to this time had been pinned behind the door."

"He was clad in a very short . . . what we would call a top—it came down to the top of his stomach. From there on down he was naked," Stewart said.

At the scene, Stewart testified, his wife then addressed him: "Now, Johnston, cut out all this foolishness. You come home with me this minute."

He didn't come home, Stewart said, and has not since.

The trial resumes today in Judge F. Dickinson Letts' court.

Trial of Rep. Thomas Postponed for Week

The District Court trial of Representative J. Parnell Thomas (R., N. J.), charged with payroll-kickback conspiracy, was continued yesterday until November 14.

Judge Alexander Holtzoff postponed the trial after being informed that Thomas's attorney, William H. Collins, is now engaged in the trial of William "Snags" Lewis and 13 others on gambling charges here.

2-Roomer Limitation To Return

Zoning Body Rules Restricted Area Rooming Houses Must Close June 30

The District Zoning Commission ruled yesterday that rooming houses in restricted neighborhoods will have to close up by June 30.

Robert O. Clouser, commission secretary, said that the commission's ruling means that after expiration of the deadline homes in restricted areas will be allowed to take in no more than two roomers.

The commission, he said, was ending a wartime relaxation of regulations which permitted landlords to take in up to four roomers without obtaining special occupancy permits.

No More Extensions

Actually, though, the commission's action was a temporary extension of the wartime ruling which technically expired October 1. The extension was allowed as a "period of grace" to give property owners and roomers time to make adjustments, Clouser said. He was emphatic that no more extensions will be granted.

The two-roomer limit was relaxed during the war when the room shortage was at its height, Clouser said. Later the regulations again were amended to permit homes in restricted neighborhoods to take in an unlimited number of roomers providing a special license was obtained and the Board of Zoning adjustments approved.

End of the wartime ruling was sought by the Washington Guest House Association which said the shortage of room accommodations no longer exists. The association estimated that there are now more than 16,000 vacant beds in rooming houses.

Other Actions Taken

In other rulings announced yesterday the commission:

Rezoned a 200-foot plot of land on the north side of Military rd. nw. between 27th and 28th sts. to permit construction of a "Retreat for Friendless Maiden Ladies." The Board of Zoning Adjustments still must approve before the home, funds for which were provided in the will of Miss Anna R. Shoemaker, can be built. Owners of detached homes in the area opposed location of the home on the site.

Rezoned land on the southeast corner of Connecticut ave. and Elliott sts. nw. to allow the construction of an apartment house.

Amended zoning regulations to permit modification of requirements for off-street parking facilities for new apartment construction where it is impractical for the builder to provide them because of topography, grading or traffic conditions.

For Retirement Funds

CSC Must Honor Post-Death Beneficiary Change Notices

By Howard L. Dutkin
Post Reporter

The Government must recognize a properly designated change in the beneficiary of a Federal employe's retirement fund even though the change had not been received before the employe's death.

That was the opinion handed down yesterday by the United States Court of Claims in a 3-2 split finding that affects virtually every Federal employe.

In admitting the statute requires that such changes must have been recorded by the Civil Service Commission, the majority opinion held, however, that: ". . . this . . . was largely a matter of keeping the record clear. The statute does not state that the recording must be done at a particular time. It is not a part of the designation but merely a record evidencing designation."

The precedent setting opinion revolved about a claim for $1500 retirement pay lodged by J. Joseph Hulsart, Charlotte, N. C., son of John Norman Hulsart, a former auditor for the General Accounting Office, who died April 14, 1947. The younger Hulsart filed the claim against the Government as administrator of his father's estate. He was represented by Attorney Henry F. Lerch.

The eldest Hulsart, who had been employed at General Accounting from 1934 to his death, had been divorced from his first wife.

In 1940 he remarried but was separated from his second wife, Carrie Ruth Hulsart, a few months later.

Carrie Ruth Hulsart had been designated as beneficiary of her husband's retirement fund in 1940.

On April 10, 1947, Hulsart filled out a new form revoking the previous designation and making his estate the beneficiary. This form was received by his agency on April 11.

On April 15 the agency sent the form by messenger to the Civil Service Agency for recording. Hulsart, however, had died the preceding day.

The Civil Service Commission refused to recognize the change of beneficiary on the ground that the form was not received in the Civil Service Commission prior to the death of the designator.

"Since there are employes . . . in various sections of the world . . . who are entitled to the benefits of Civil Service, there might in some instances be many days elapsing after a proper designation," the majority opinion pointed out.

The majority opinion was written by Chief Judge Marvin Jones with Judges Benjamin H. Littleton and Evan Howell concurring.

Dissenting was Judge J. Warren Madden with Judge Samuel E Whitaker concurring in the dissent.

Madden, in writing the dissent, asserted:

"I think the court is in error . . . even if I were in doubt as to the desirability of the regulation, I would have no more right to refuse to recognize it than I would have to refuse to recognize, because of a similar doubt, a law passed by Congress . . ."

". . . any formality . . . will occasionally result in the frustration of the clearly proved intent of the deceased. Yet such formalities are universally imposed because they prevent confusion and wasteful litigation . . ."

Bus Music Vote Result Sunday

Hundreds of returns rolled into The Washington Post yesterday in its unofficial balloting on the issue of radio broadcasts in street cars and buses.

The ballot box will be kept open for further returns through the week and a final tabulation published next Sunday.

The ballots, printed last Sunday to offer a community wide opportunity to vote yes or no on transit radio broadcasts, can be dropped in the box in the lobby of The Washington Post Building, 1337 E st. nw., or mailed to

The Music Ballot,
The Washington Post,

Disbarment Of 2 Lawyers Sought Here

Disbarment proceedings were started here yesterday against two lawyers charged with getting clients quick divorces in Baltimore with perjured testimony.

The charges filed in District Court by its committee on admissions and grievances cites the following with malpractise, professional misconduct and conduct prejudicial to the legal profession and the administration of justice:

Lemuel Oliver, a member of the District Bar since 1926 and with offices in the Munsey Building, Baltimore, Md.

The attorneys are named in seven separate charges accusing them of knowingly allowing clients to use "false and fictitious" addresses so as to claim legal residence in Maryland.

High Court To Decide on Inspections

Health Dept. Right To Enter Dwellings Without Warrant To Be Determined

The Supreme Court agreed yesterday to decide whether a District health officer must obtain a warrant before inspecting a private home if the owner or occupant objects.

The Court of Appeals in August upheld the right of Mrs. Geraldine Little, 1315 10th st. nw. to refuse to admit an inspector without the legal paper in hand. She had been convicted and fined $25 for forcibly keeping the inspector out of her house.

The Health Department employe, at the trial, testified there had been a complaint that "there was an accumulation of loose and uncovered garbage and trash in the halls" and that "certain of the persons residing therein had failed to avail themselves of the toilet facilities."

The District Government lost when Mrs. Little appealed to the Municipal Court of Appeals and the Federal appeals bench upheld the Municipal appeals ruling in a 2-to-1 decision.

In going to the Supreme Court, the District contended that health inspections are a reasonable exercise of the police power in behalf of public health and that some 60,000 inspections are made annually. Similar inspections running into tens of thousands more are made by fire, building, plumbing and other inspectors. All probably would be forbidden without a warrant in cases of objection should the Supreme Court uphold the Little argument.

Judge E. Barrett Prettyman, for the Court of Appeals, declared that "one prop of the structure of our system is gone and an outstanding characteristic of another form of government will have been substituted" if the courts permit private homes to be opened "to the intrusion of Government enforcement officials, without the intervening mind and hand of a magistrate" who issues warrants.

Prosecutor Pleased

But the District argues that it is impossible for an inspector to swear to facts in obtaining a warrant since he does not know in advance of an inspection what things he will uncover.

Chester H. Gray, assistant corporation counsel, who has chiefly handled the District's case, said yesterday he was gratified at the high court's action. He pointed out that the Institute of Municipal Law officers has filed a brief in the District's behalf, pointing out that similar inspections all over the Nation would be imperiled if the appeals decision stands.

Gray said he knew of no jurisdiction in which a warrant was required to make an inspection such as the one now in question.

Judge Prettyman, however, called the District's argument against warrants "preposterous," declaring prohibition against searches springs from "the common-law right of a man to privacy in his home; a right which is one of the indispensable ultimate essentials of our concept of civilization."

New Faces on the Bench

Appeals Judge Fahy Won Ruling Upholding Wagner Act

By Bill Brinkley
Post Reporter

Third of a series

A deep Southerner, a leading American liberal. Holder of the Navy's highest combat award (for night bombing work) and of the Nation's highest civilian honor (for UN work). This is Charles Fahy, new Court of Appeals judge.

Fahy's most dominant physical characteristic is a sensationally soft-spoken voice, which has given birth to such sobriquets as that of "Whispering Charlie."

It has to do with Fahy's arguments before the Supreme Court on behalf of the Wagner Act: When the court ruled the act constitutional by a 5-4 vote, the story goes, the division was caused by the fact that Fahy spoke so quietly only five of the justices could hear him.

Fahy's role as guiding force in the stupendous legal battle that ended with Labor's Magna Charta being declared constitutional is doubtless the monument of his career to date.

Played Other Roles

But he has played many other important roles in activities ranging from destroyer-trading to atomic energy control. Never a man to leave one little finger idle, he goes into his judgeship from holding at least five different jobs simultaneously.

On the walls of his law office at 1625 K st. nw. hangs a picture inscribed "For Charles Fahy from his old friend . . . Franklin D. Roosevelt."

It was in the days when Woodrow Wilson was vainly trying to persuade all Americans to that conviction that Fahy's belief in world organizaton took spark. (Wilson's first wife, incidentally, was from his hometown, and she and Fahy's mother were classmates at the Rome Female College in Georgia.) A quarter century later Fahy was in San Francisco helping the United Nations through its birth-pains.

Fahy is an utterly self-possessed man of 57, with black hair partially overlaid with white, a grayish mustache.

He was born in Rome, Ga., turning up exactly midway in the 11 children of a dry-goods merchant—nine are living. The Fahy Store in Rome is still operated by two of them.

He went to Notre Dame for a year, in 1914 got a law degree from Georgetown University.

As a young lawyer he participated in the celebrated Wan case. A young Chinese student had been accused of a triple murder. He was convicted, but Fahy helped carry the case to the Supreme Court, claiming a confession Wan had made was involuntary. A retrial was ordered. But two retrials brought hung juries both times. Wan was freed.

Fahy interrupted his law practice to fly as a naval aviator, one of those old World War I three-man biplanes where "the plane itself was a greater threat to you than the enemy." He is not the sort of man who throws his war record up in your face, doesn't like to talk about it.

But the facts of the matter are that for bombing submarine pens and other German installations in occupied Belgium he won the Navy Cross "for distinguished and heroic service."

Met Roosevelt in France

It was at the French aerodrome from which he operated that Fahy first laid eyes on the man with whose career his own was destined to dovetail so closely. He remembers Roosevelt, on an inspection tour as Assistant Secretary of the Navy, "a fine looking, tall youngish man striding vigorously across the field." This was before infantile paralysis struck FDR down.

Even here there is something of a parallel in the lives of the two men.

Fahy had returned to Washington and the practice of law when his career was suddenly checked in 1924 by bad health.

Hospitalized for 17 months, he was forced to move to Santa Fe, N. Mex., for his health's sake—and what was to be a spectacular comeback.

Helped Pueblo Indians

Meantime, out of the mainstream, he turned characteristically to the matter at hand that needed doing: Helping, representing the Pueblo Indians in their dealings with the Government.

It looked as if Fate were playing her own game.

For this very work was to give Fahy an insight into Interior Department workings, bring him back to Washington in 1933—his health regained now—as the department's first assistant solicitor.

The Washington Post

In 1935, when the springtime of the New Deal had begun to collide head on with some major court-dams, Fahy was offered the job of general counsel of the National Labor Relations Board. A former associate describes the circumstances:

"Charlie had a good job where he was, a permanent job. What we had to offer was far more arduous, a very troublesome job. We faced an uphill fight. What was more, it was a job that might be over in a year. But he took it."

The job was to see that the Wagner Act remained law and was given effective administration. How he did this is history. Beginning in 1935, he prepared the cases which were to decide the question of the act's constitutionality; finally, in 1937, he presented the historic arguments before the Supreme Court.

It was because the Wagner Act did so much to "spread the area of individual liberty" that Fahy considers his work on the legal end of it the most satisfying of his life.

From 1941 to 1945 he was Solicitor General of the United States—Number 2 job in the Justice Department. In the Attorney General's absence, he sat in on the Cabinet meetings of the man he had first seen at an aerodrome in France.

In 1941 Fahy was civilian member of the President's Base Lease Commission to London, negotiating the leases of British-colony bases in exchange for the 50 old destroyers.

Won Medal for Merit

It was this work plus his work as legal adviser to Eisenhower, then to General Clay in the military government in Germany plus his UN work that brought Fahy the Medal for Merit, awarded him by President Truman.

Mrs. Fahy is the former Agnes Lane, daughter of the late Thomas J. Lane, who was a contractor and builder here. The Fahys live at 5500 Chevy Chase pkwy. nw., and have four children: 19-year-old twins, Charles, a sophomore at Notre Dame, and Anne, a student at Trinity College; Sarah, 17, also at Trinity, and Agnes, 14, who attends Georgetown Visitation Convent.

A look at the list of jobs Fahy has held, keeping aim on the move, stresses it is no wonder that one of the things he looks forward to in his judgeship is getting to spend more time at home with his family.

Advised Baruch

Some of the important work has been in atomic energy. He was State Department legal adviser to Bernard Baruch in his original presentation of what became known as the Baruch plan for international control of atomic energy.

He goes into his judicial post from holding these five different jobs:

Alternate representative of the United State Delegation to the General Assembly of the United Nations.

Chairman of the Personnel Security Review Board of the Atomic Energy Commission.

Law lecturer at Catholic University.

And, in what time has been left over, his own private law practice.

Being a judge can be rigorous work these days, but Charles Fahy ought indeed to have just a little more time on his hands than he's used to.

Wednesday — Judge James R. Kirkland.

Driver Acquitted In Marlboro Traffic Death

Raymond Smith, jr., 25, now of Cedar Point, Md., was acquitted of manslaughter yesterday by Judge John B. Gray, jr., at Upper Marlboro.

The charges were placed as result of a traffic accident last December 13, in Hyattsville, when Smith's car struck Mr. and Mrs. Thomas W. Miller, of 4520 38th st., Brentwood, Md. The husband, 75, a retired Federal building guard, subsequently died of his injuries.

Mrs. Miller, now 70, recovered. She was a witness at the trial, which was held without a jury. Testimony of witnesses conflicted on condition of highway lane and markings and also on whether a green traffic light favored the Millers or Smith.

The District traffic death toll rose again yesterday when it was determined that a 70-year-old man died Saturday as result of injuries suffered when he was struck by a streetcar on last July 5.

The victime was Andrew Denham, who in recent weeks lived with his son, Roland Denham at 715 Randolph st. ne.

The accident took place at 3d st., and Independence ave. sw. Police said he stepped from behind a streetcar platform, walked behind a standing streetcar, and into the side of another moving streetcar.

His son, Roland, said yesterday that at the time of the accident, he was taken to Gallinger Hospital and treated for head injuries. He remained there until July 30, the son said, then was taken to a nursing home at Colesville, Md. After his death Saturday a private physician issued a death certificate citing a cerebral hemorrhage but attributing it to natural causes.

Roland Denham asked Dr. A. Magruder MacDonald, District coroner, to perform an autopsy, which was done yesterday. Dr. MacDonald confirmed the cerebral hemorrhage, but said it came as result of the head injuries in the accident.

Dr. MacDonald issued a District certificate of accidental death. Police listed the driver of the streetcar as Clayton R. Uleckie, 42, of 960 Randolph st. nw.

Mr. Denham was a retired streetcar operator, leaving the Capital Transit Co. about 15 years ago after 35 years of service. Beside his son, he is survived by three sisters, Mrs. Lula Gibson, Mrs. Olive Payne, and Miss Maude Denham, all of Washington, and two brothers, Zebulon Denham of Washington, and Bolling Denham of New York City.

Funeral services will take place at 11 a. m. Tuesday at the Lee Funeral Chapel, 4th st. and Massachusetts ave. ne. Burial will be at Congressional Cemetery.

Hopkins Gets $49,626 for Cancer Work

The United States Public Health Service has authorized a grant of $49,626 to develop a process which may lead to almost instantaneous diagnosis of stomach cancer.

The grant, one of ten new allocations announced yesterday by Federal Security Administrator Oscar R. Ewing, goes to Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, Md., where Dr. Russell H. Morgan will supervise work in the development of the process.

The District Health Department received a $22,254 grant. The money will be used by Dr. Charlotte Donlan to prepare an accurate cost study of the newer plans for medically supervised home care for cancer patients. Dr. Donlan will give special emphasis to concealed costs in preparing her estimates.

The USPHS also announced continuation of a $7250 grant to the Georgetown University Medical School for studies on malignant bone tumors already under way by Dr. Charles E. Geschickter.

The project for diagnosis of stomach cancer in its early stages will make use of an adaptation of a method worked out by the Army for rapid processing of radar photographs in combat operations.

This method will eliminate darkroom equipment and film storage files in examining centers.

It will permit diagnosticians to receive an immediate report on any signs of disease. As a result a patient may undergo a complete physical check-up in one clinic trip. At present he may be called back when development of X-rays shows suspicious symptoms. Doctors have found that letters requesting the callback have caused great fear and apprehension by the patients, who put off returning for further examinations.

J. R. Kirkland Becomes Judge On D. C. Bench

James R. Kirkland was sworn in yesterday as the thirteenth judge of the District Court bench.

The new jurist took his oath in a simple ceremony with 500 well-wishers packing the courtroom and adjoining corridors. Kirkland had with him his parents, his wife and three small children.

The courtroom was flower bedecked as Kirkland repeated the oath of office before Chief Judge Bolitha J. Laws.

Among the witnesses were Mrs. Burnita S. Matthews and Charles F. McLaughlin, both of whom were appointed to the Federal Court bench with Kirkland. Mrs. Matthews will be sworn in on Wednesday and McLaughlin on November 15.

The proceedings were delayed several minutes, it being anticipated that the commission of office would be presented by Attorney General J. Howard McGrath, who did not appear.

Kirkland's judicial robes were presented by his associates, the law firm with which he had been associated for the last 12 years.

Paul B. Cromelin pointed out that Chief Judge Laws had been Kirkland's predecessor in the firm which became Cromelin, Townsendh & Kirkland.

A 14-year-old boy was knocked from his bicycle and fatally injured last night as he rode on Virginia Route 1, about a half mile north of Ft. Belvoir.

Breaking Ground for New Catholic High School . . .

The Washington Post

FIRST OF THREE PLANNED—The Most Rev. John M. McNamara, Auxiliary Bishop of Washington (center), turns the first spadeful of sod at ground-breaking ceremonies yesterday for the $1,850,000 new John Carroll Catholic High School for boys to be erected at 4300 Harewood rd. ne. Looking on are the Most Rev. Patrick A. O'Boyle, Archbishop of Washington (second from right), and four seminarians from the Catholic University. The school is the first of three tentatively planned by the archdiocese for erection in the Washington area. Construction of John Carroll High School will begin immediately. It is scheduled for completion by September, 1951, and is designed to accommodate 1000 boys.

Halfway Mark Reached in Chest Drive

The Community Chest Federation drive inched a little closer to the goal of $3,991,719 with Business Unit No. 2 yesterday reporting $73,717 or 30.49 percent of its quota pledged or collected.

Entering the second week of the campaign, total donations last night stood at $2,076,904—just past the halfway mark.

Aaron Goldman, chairman of Business Unit No. 2, pointing to "statistically encouraging" campaign progress, told his area workers at a Washington Hotel luncheon meeting to "get out on the pavement immediately punch doorbells" and show up at the Wednesday report meeting with at least a 50 percent showing.

Only 823 Gifts Turned In

The unit's 1100 Chest workers, he stressed, have brought in only 823 gifts since last Friday—a record of less than one gift per worker—from a potential field of about 18,000 small District business firms which comprise Business Unit No. 2.

Combined reports from all nine soliciting units, including campaigns in nearby Maryland and Virginia, will be announced at a general report luncheon today at 12:30 p. m. at the Washington Hotel.

At yesterday's report luncheon Arch McDonald, sports announcer for Radio Station WTOP., called upon solicitors to display the same "give a little extra" spirit that won for the New York Yankees this year's baseball pennant.

Yankee Performance Cited

"The performance of that ball club, in the face of almost impossible odds, was a most remarkable inspiration, not only in sports but in human relations," McDonald said.

Hugh K. Duffield, vice chairman of Unit No. 2, warned workers not to accept a merchant's refusal to donate on grounds that his trade association has already collected from him.

Community Chest headquarters, he emphasized, has already received firm committments from all such associations that they have not, nor will not, seek donations from individual members.

Yesterday's cumulative collections or pledges from the nine areas in Unit No. 2 were reported as follows: Area O — $9058 or 29.33 percent of its quota; Area 1—$11,611, or 32.19 percent; Area 2—$6508, or 44.81 percent; Area 3—$5187 or 36.54 percent; Area 4—$2066 or 14.76 percent; Area 5—$1856 or 13.25 percent; Area 6—$2185 or 16.41 percent; Area 7—$2224, or 34.7 percent; Area 8—$770, or 10.65 percent and Area 9—$688, or 9.07 percent.

Meanwhile, reports from the nearby counties showed these campaign highlights:

In Arlington County, report meetings are scheduled for Monday and Wednesday nights through November 21.

In Fairfax County, Mrs. Milton Hartley, chairman of the Falls Church district of the Fairfax drive, reported the district has already passed the 100 percent mark.

Crash Pilot Is Recovering; CAB Silent on Investigation

The Civil Aeronautics Board kept silent yesterday on the progress of its investigation into the midair collision near National Airport last Tuesday but it was learned that no new statement has yet been taken from the only survivor of the crash.

Erick Rios Bridoux, the Bolivian P-38 pilot who collided with an Eastern Airlines DC4, was described as "out of the woods and doing fine" yesterday at Alexandria Hospital. Fiftyfive persons died in the collision.

No Request, Embassy Says

Bolivian Embassy officials, however, said the CAB had made no request as yet for another interview with Bridoux. Investigators took a preliminary statement from the 30-year-old pilot shortly after the crash when it was feared he might die but would like a more thorough interview before they open the investigation to the public.

Open hearings have been scheduled to begin at 9:30 a. m. Wednesday in Hearing Room B of the Interdepartmental Auditorium, Constitution ave. between 12th and 14th sts. nw.

Three Minutes Before Crash

Meanwhile, yesterday, a check of records at the National Airport tower showed that a Bolling Air Force Base B-25 made a simulated instrument landing there at 11:43 a. m., or about three minutes before the crash just south of National Airport.

In a preliminary statement, Bridoux is known to have told the CAB that his craft experienced a power loss and that the only plane he spotted was a twin-engine, twin-tailed aircraft somewhat similar to a B-25.

Bridoux was ordered to land second and it was believed possible that he thought he was to follow the B-25 in.

Claim 11:35 Clearing

Bolling Air Force Base officials, however, maintained that the B-25 had cleared National Airport by 11:35. Since the P-38, according to National Airport, did not take off until about 11:37 a. m., it could not have been confused by the B-25 if the Bolling time is accurate.

If, however, 11:43 is the correct time, the B-25 would have been over National Airport just about the time Bridoux was circling over Alexandria getting ready for a landing. Since at this time, the DC-4 was still a little north of the airport, en route from New York, Bridoux would have seen only the B-25 in the immediate landing area.

Tower officials also said yesterday that, as far as could be recalled, Bridoux had asked for normal landing instructions without indicating he was in any sort of trouble.

Tower controllers added that it was unlikely that there had been a mixup in communications because Bridoux had acknowledged at least one of the tower transmissions.

3 Units Share Inauguration's Final Profits

Three charitable organizations will share in the $30,000 to $40,000 final profits of the Inauguration Committee, Melvin D. Hildreth, chairman of the committee, said yesterday.

They are the Community Chest, the Florence Crittenden Home and the Home for Incurables.

The largest part of the contribution will go to the Chest. The committee had planned, Hildreth said, to make that contribution on the last day of the drive as a means of pushing the drive over the top.

The inaugural events resulted in payment of some $65,000 in Federal taxes. The Senate last January voted the tax liability, though previous inaugurals had been free of Federal taxes.

Hildreth said yesterday that if the committee had known in advance that the tickets for the parade, the ball and the gala were to be taxed it would have added the tax to the selling price. That would have brought in more than $100,000 instead of about $40,000.

The Inaugural Ball provided more than half the entire profits, a financial report made public by Hildreth shows.

The ball netted $58,956.39, almost enough to pay the expenses of all the ceremonies.

The profits of the various events, outside of the ball, were:

Parade, $19,617.22; gala, $15,006.37; programs, $10,720.06; concessions, $7336.63, and medals, $4151.79.

Officials of the Inaugural Committee pointed out that the financial statement contradicted a report, published in The Washington Post, that the Gala had been "bailed out" by the profits from the Ball. The latter was operated by Mrs. Perle Mesta, Minister to Luxembourg.

The total profit shown on the report was $48,861.85. The committee plans to turn over from $35,000 to $40,000 of this to the present Community Chest drive. The remainder, the report states, to met "potential tax liabilities" and some small unsettled claims.

Silver Spring Boy 2d Polio Case in Family

Montgomery County health authorities yesterday reported that polio has stricken a second child in a Silver Spring (Md.) family near whose home are stagnant drainage ditches believed by residents to be polio breeders.

The latest victim, a 7-months-old boy in the 200 block of E. Franklin ave., Silver Spring, is the fourth reported in the area. One case was fatal.

Following complaints from parents in the neighborhood and an inspection by State and county officials, County Manager Irving G. McNayr said last Wednesday that the State Roads Commission will lay drainage pipes and grade the area to eliminate standing water.

The work will be done following an engineering survey to be begun immediately, McNayr reported.

The infant whose case was reported yesterday, who was admitted to Children's Hospital here, became the 34th polio case in Montgomery County this year. His brother, who is 4, was reported on October 27 to be in Children's Hospital with the disease.

The ditches run along Franklin ave. between Flower ave. and Old Bladensburg rd. Residents say children often play in the stagnant water despite warnings from parents, and there is a belief that the water is a source of polio germs.

The thirty-fifth case reported in Montgomery County yesterday was that of a 7-year-old boy in the 200 block of Flower ave., Takoma Park, who was previously listed in the polio records as a District desident.

Escalators For Underpass Asked Again

Dupont Circle Citizens Association yesterday renewed a demand for installation of escalators on each side of the circle underpass for the convenience of persons alighting from the underground streetcars.

Meeting at the Mayflower Hotel, the group unanimously indorsed a resolution calling on the District Commissioners to appropriate $50,000 for two escalators — one on each side of the circle. A similar request made last December was rejected by the city heads.

In a second unanimous resolution, the association asked the Capital Transit Co. to arrange for streetcar stops at each end of the underground circle, rather than at the center only.

Traffic Director George E. Keneipp urged the group to back continuation of the District's 4-cent gasoline tax after June 30, 1952, when the tax reverts to 3 cents, in order to permit continuation of traffic signal expansion and other projects.

Mme. Tsaldaris Entertained

MME CONSTANTIN TSALDARIS, wife of the Vice Premier of Greece was entertained last evening at a buffet supper given by the Minister of Greece, Paul Economou-Gouras, and Mme. Economou-Gouras. Guests numbered nearly 100.

In the gathering were the Ambassador of Iran, Hussein Ala; the Assistant Secretary of State and Mrs. George C. McGhee, Gen. and Mrs. J. A. Gascoigne, Gen. and Mrs. Harry H. Vaughan, Eugene Meyer, Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Bennett, Mr. and Mrs. John Shields, Mrs. Martin Vogel, Admiral and Mrs. James H. Foskett, Mrs. McCeney Werlich, and Mr. and Mrs. Jones Davis.

Holcombs Honored

THE COMMANDANT OF THE MARINE CORPS and Mrs. Clifton B. Cates entertained yesterday at a small cocktail party for their house guests, the former commandant, Gen. Thomas Holcomb and Mrs. Holcomb, who are in town for two days.

On Wednesday, General and Mrs. Cates are leaving for Camp Lejeune, N. C., to visit Maj. Gen. and Mrs. Franklin Hart.

FOREIGN Minister Andrei Vishinsky was the star of the afternoon at the Soviet Embassy yesterday, but Miss Margaret Thors, daughter of the Icelandic Minister and Mme. Thors, had snared a star of her own. He was Peter Lawford, of Hollywood fame, who came with Miss Thors to the Soviet reception.

Smiling Vishinsky Greets 2000 Guests At October Revolution Celebration

By Marie McNair

WITH no vodka at hand, Russia's Foreign Minister, Andrei Vishinsky, took a bottle of sauterne from a passing tray, poured demitasses full for newsmen crowded around him.

The occasion was the reception yesterday at the Soviet Embassy given by the Ambassador and Mme. Panyushkin to celebrate the Great October Revolution.

The Soviet Union's key figure at UN had come down to Washington for the day. He seemed in rare good humor, joking and laughing with the press after he had stood in the receiving line for almost two hours to greet almost 2000 guests.

A newspaper correspondent asked Mr. Vishinsky if he remembered a lunch in Naples in 1943. He did—but he added, relations were "a little warmer then." What about invading Mars, a journalist asked. "Oh, no" replied Mr. Vishinsky, "Mars is on our side."

And as he moved from one room to another, with a crowd at his heels, conversation was in like vein.

Lavish Buffet

MORE taxicabs than limousines drew up at the embassy door yesterday afternoon.

Members of the Diplomatic Corps who were in town were therefi from the dean of the corps, Wilhelm Munthe de Morgenstierne, down to the newest member of the corps, the Venezuelan Ambassador, Jose Rafael Pocaterra. Conspicuous by his absence was the Yugoslav Ambassador, Sava Kosanovic, who was not invited.

There was the same lavishness about the buffets with a room length table set up in the dining room, in the big red and gold ballroom, a third with a room-length table set up in the dining room, another in the big red and gold ballroom, a third in a smaller salon, all with bars nearby. There was a sparkling Kremlin fashioned of ice as decoration on one table; a papier mache Kremlin tower topped with a brilliant red star resting on a cake 3 feet in diameter, in the dining room. And there were chafing dishes of creamed chicken, platters of cold sliced turkeys, chicken salad, vegetable salads, mousses, and hum ice cream and little cakes.

Russian Music

THE Ambassador and Mme. Panyushkin stood in the wide hallway with Mr. Vishinsky first in line. Overhead from a second-floor balcony a stringed orchestra played music by Russian composers.

The Ambassador wore his diplomatic uniform—black with gold braid and a string of medals held by red ribbons pinned to his chest. Foreign Minister Vishinsky wore a dark sack suit. Mme. Panyushkin's gown was floor length—dark green velvet with a delicate tracery of gold and made with short sleeves. A pendant of diamonds and rubies fell from a slender chain about her throat.

Prompt Arrivals

WHO was there?

Well, promptly on the dot of five, the Benelux envoys—the Belgian Ambassador, Baron Robert Silvercruys; the Netherlands Ambassador, Eelco van Kleffens, and the Luxembourg Minister, Hugues LeGallais, arrived together from the airport, where they had gone to bid farewell to Secretary of State Dean Acheson. At 5:10, the trio were on their way again.

The French Ambassador, Henri Bonnet, wearing dark blue suede shoes with his gray-blue suit, came alone, as Mme. Bonnet had left yesterday for New York. The British Ambassador, Sir Oliver Franks, in "black tie," and Lady Franks, in a long black frock and white wool jacket, were there. They returned yesterday to Washington from a fortnight's stay in California.

Pocket-sized Hussein Ala, Iran Ambassador, came in alone. So, too, did the Czechoslovak Ambassador, Dr. Vladimir Outrata. With the Argentine Ambassador, Jeronimo Remorino, were the Naval Attache of the Argentine Embassy, Rear Admiral Luis Merlo Flores and blond Senora de Flores, she in black with a tiny black velvet hat.

Webb Represents U. S.

JAMES E. WEBB, Undersecretary of State, was top-ranking man from the State Department yesterday, in the absence of Secretary of State Dean Acheson, who left late yesterday afternoon by plane for Paris. I saw good-looking Mrs. Stanley Woodward, a symphony in brown, who reported her husband, who is Chief of Protocol, was in New York to bid Pandit Nehru farewell. Ray Muir, Assistant Chief of Protocol, was there, and Mrs. Dean Rusk, wife of the Deputy Undersecretary of State; also George Kennan, Counselor of the State Department and Chief of its Policy Planning Division.

Hume Wrong, Canadian Ambassador, came, but not Mrs. Wrong. The diplomatic duo from Mexico was the Ambassador, Rafael de la Colina, and Senora de Colina, wearing a smart taupe velvet frock with hat of matching shade.

Then there were the Dominican Ambassador and Senora de Thomen; Mme. Thors, wife of the Icelandic Minister; the Ambassador of Israel and Mme. Elath, the Polish Ambassador and Mme. Winiewicz.

A bright figure in the throng was Mme. Sen in scarlet and gold sari over a sheer white gown sprinkled with gold stars. She came with her husband, the Indian Minister.

And most elegantly dressed was Mrs. Joseph Davies, in black satin gown with black jet beads, and, on her beautifully coiffed silver gray hair alternating pouffs of green and black satin to make a hat.

No Chinese Envoy

NOWHERE did I see a member of the Nationalist Chinese Embassy staff. But representatives of the Soviet satellite countries included the Romanian Ambassador, Mihail Magheru.

The Turkish Ambassador and Mrs. Erkin, looking in the pink after three months' holiday in Europe, were greeting friends on all sides. Others there were Admiral Felix Johnson, USN, and Mrs. Johnson; the Swiss Minister and Mme. Bruggmann; the First Secretary of the South African Embassy and Mrs. Dirkse-van-Schalkwk; Mr. and Mrs. Eric Johnston and their daughter, Harriett; Sir Derick Hoyer Miller, Mrs. Estes Kefauver, wife of the Tennessee Senator; the Greek Minister and Mme. Economou-Gouras; the Air Attache of the New Zealand Embassy, Air Commodore and Mrs. J. L. Findlay, and Maj. John Chapman, head of the Australian Military Mission, and Mrs. Chapman.

From the Cuban Embassy there were the Minister Counselor and Senora de Meyer and the First Secretary and Senora de Rivero, and Oscar Albertini, the Financial Counselor.

Unofficial Washingtonians could be counted on two hands. Among them were Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Morris, Mr. and Mrs. Marcel Ancher, and Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Burke. And, of course, the twosome that attend almost every big party—Gaiux, who makes the introductions, and Cole, who stands outside to open the car doors.

Guatemalan Minister Here

Dr. Ismael Gonzalez-Arevalo, former Ambassador of Guatemala and now Minister of Foreign Affairs of Guatemala, is in Washington for a visit of two or three days. He is stopping at the embassy.

Married Couple Are Much in Love, But Man's Aloof Attitude Towards Young Stepson Creates A Problem They Can't Fathom; Wife Asks Help

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: My husband and I have been married over two years and I have a school-age son by a former marriage. I am very much in love with Jay and he with me, but his relations with my son present a problem. He completely ignores the boy at all times, speaking to him only to correct him.

The child feels Jay's dislike and has mentioned it to me on several occasions; and for the last 18 months I have tried in vain to learn the reason for Jay's attitude. There seems to be no jealousy involved, and he thinks the world of our nieces and nephews, and he has never physically abused Bill—but he says he just can't like him, try as he might.

We have never quarreled about the situation, but we have talked it over several times and Jay has promised he would try very hard to change his attitude, but the other day he said he guessed the problem is hopeless. He said he didn't think he could ever like Bill, and since this environment is completely wrong for my son, I am wondering if the marriage is bound for the rocks.

I have tried to help Jay every way I can, but I hardly know how, when I can't understand the cause of his aloofness to Bill and when he can't explain it either. If this problem could be worked out I am sure we could be very, very happy; and I certainly don't want to break up my home if there is a way to avoid it. Your advice will be much appreciated. V. P.

Man Is Battling His Infantilism

DEAR V. P.: It is my impression that Jay is a pretty decent sort, in that he has some degree of sensitivity and regard for fair play, but in relation to Bill he is blocked from being an open-hearted foster father, due to a lot of anxious infantilism that still lurks in his unconscious, clogging the development of his character.

The significance of his involuntary aloofness to Bill seems clear to me, and if he can't explain his attitude, it is because he has the sixth sense to feel ashamed of the unmanly emotions back of it—even if he hasn't spelled them out to himself. And because he has that much awareness, plus the grace to blush for unworthy sentiments, I venture to think he can grow up, despite his poor showing with Bill thus far.

Actions speak louder than words in detonating hidden dynamite in one's emotions, and Jay's performance in completely ignoring Bill, except when correcting him, obviously and naively reveals that he wishes the boy didn't exist—so that he, Jay, might have you all to himself, unencumbered, without prior commitments to love, or tangible evidence of having been loved before, etc.

Man Should Deal From His Strength

HOWEVER, chalk it up to Jay's credit that he wouldn't entertain that "wish" if it crossed his mind, which is to say, he honestly doesn't know why he "can't" like Bill. So don't make the mistake of thinking, "Why, you monster——," etc., in catching a glimpse of his emotional block. The average person is pretty much an innocent victim of what goes on in his unconscious, unless and until he's had professional help in taking stock of forces resident there.

The creative solution of the difficulty is to understand the unrealistic, unbidden, involuntary nature of Jay's unconscious "rejection" of Bill; and then proceed on the basis of this shared understanding to behave realistically, towards each other and the child, in the family relationship.

Up to now Jay has been, and again I must say, unconsciously, marking himself down, unnecessarily, to a child level of consequence in the situation. And what he needs to realize is that he holds all the cards for being King of Hearts in the relationship, the idol of wife and foster son, if only he has the sense to deal from his strength,—i. e., by acting like the man he is, per nature's reckoning, and concerning himself to give the justifiably anxious little boy a really fatherly brand of devotion. M. H.

New Rule for Parents

Discipline Can Fit the Child And Yet Leave Elbow Room

To puzzled, worried parents and teachers who feel that the old disciplinary methods don't work but who think that the modern way is "no discipline at all," Dr. Dorothy W. Baruch explains how we can fashion discipline to fit the child and suit ourselves, making it a creative undertaking instead of a mechanical thing.

In the Public Affairs pamphlet, "How to Discipline Your Children," published yesterday, Dr. Baruch does not give specific remedies for specific problems but outlines some useful principles that hold good "whether a child is 2 or teen-age."

The essential fact that every parent must know, the author states, is that "bad feelings cause bad actions."

And the three kinds of "bad feelings" that cause most kinds of misbehavior are expressed in the pamphlet this way: "I'm feeling hurt . . . I'm feeling angry . . . I'm feeling scared."

May Pop Out

These bothers, stored up inside, may pop out in different ways. Sue, at 6 grabs from every child in the neighborhood; at 16, she steals. Both problems are her way of saying, at different ages, I'm hurt. I never get enough loving. I feel mean and want something tangible to make up for the lack of love."

The hurts that pop out in fear and anger and misbehavior can be prevented, Dr. Baruch points out, by feeding the emotional hunger of the child with three basic foods: love, understanding and success.

"The best way to give a child of any age enough loving is really to love him." And really loving a child, Dr. Baruch explains, means having good feelings inside ourselves about him. It means learning to know him as an individual,

Watch, Find Out

"Watching and listening and finding out what he really is like" will also help us to give him the feeling that he is a capable individual, for it will prevent us from expecting accomplishments beyond his years and keep us from overloading him with countless requests," the pamphlet points out.

Once we have gained a child's cooperation—by accepting his bad feelings, understanding them, and loving him still—the next step is to get him to face and admit his "mean thoughts." Dr. Baruch suggests that if we can say his feelings out loud for him in an understanding acceptant way, he'll feel safer in facing them.

"When the violence comes out, there is less left to be stored—less left to pop in misbehavior at all different times of the day," concludes Dr. Baruch.

Faculty 'Tests' Juvenile Books

School-tested books and recordings for children will be on display and sale Friday and Saturday at the Green Acres School in Bethesda.

The collection of books and recordings is designed to answer a question asked by many parents: What articles of this type should we buy for our children? Members of the school faculty have screened lists from leading publishers to compile the collection which they recommend for youngsters from age 3 up.

Young readers who like their facts unvarnished by fiction will find a special table of "factual" books. There is also a full collection of imaginative stories. In addition there is a section devoted to easy-to-read books; toys for children who are ill, and a group of old and unusual children's books.

Items will be for sale at regular retail prices, with proceeds for the benefit of the school. Two Bethesda stores, the Cucumber Book Shop and Magee Radio and Television, have cooperated with the school in securing wholesale supplies. Hours of the sale will be from noon to 5 p. m. Friday, and from 10 a. m. to 6 p. m. Saturday.

Green Acres School, founded in 1934, is a parent-owned cooperative.

Volunteers to Bolster Polio Drive Are Vitally Needed, Advisers Told

By Genevieve Reynolds

A CALL for 200,000 women volunteers to aid with medical care program and the March of Dimes fund campaign was issued yesterday by the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis.

Miss Elaine Whitelaw, national director of women's activities of the NFIP, made the emergency appeal at the fifth annual conference of representatives of women's organizations and State advisers. The conference, opened yesterday at the Wardman Park Hotel, will end Thursday.

Miss Whitelaw said active support of additional women volunteers is essential if the Foundation is to carry out its two-fold responsibility: to provide medical care and to raise funds.

She pointed out that the future assistance to polio patients is endangered by depletion of March of Dimes funds. An estimated 20 million dollars is needed to continue medical treatment for those stricken in 1949 and those who will need care in 1950.

Tells of Own Recovery

MRS. Beatrice Wright, a delegate to the conference, told how she had taken her first steps Sunday night since being stricken with polio August 26. She flew here from Detroit with her physical therapist, Miss Ruth Beck, one of 1200 who have studied physical therapy on scholarships given by the foundation.

During the summer she had worked day and night with polio victims in Detroit and became overtired. Fatigue made her vulnerable to the attack, she believes.

"The foundation pays for my treatment," she explained. "Without its financial help, my sons would have to drop out of school."

Speaking at the morning session, George V. Voss epidemic coordinator and director of the national foundation's chapters, said that 683 respirators were sent out this year by the foundation, more than any other year in the last 10.

He said that the foundation had paid for transportation, maintenace and salaries of 2759 recruited nurses, 167 recruited physical therapists, and had advanced $8,363,949 in March of Dimes funds.

Health Bills Contrasted

THE principal difference between two major health bills awaiting Congress action lies in the word "compulsory." One, the Thomas bill, calls for compulsory participation in a Government-supervised health program. This is sponsored by Democrats. A Republican-sponsored measure, the National Health Bill of 1949, requires that only persons who wish need subscribe to the health program.

This comparison of the bills was outlined yesterday by Winslow Carlton, director of the Cooperation Health Federation of America, who was a consultant for the Republican bill.

In an address before the D. C. League of Republican Women at the Mayflower Hotel, Mr. Carlton also pointed out that under the Thomas bill, administration of the medical program would take place in a central agency. Administration of the Republican bill would be handled within the individual States, counties and towns, he stressed.

The speaker was introduced by Mrs. Edgar Quayle, acting program chairman. Program Chairman Mrs. Robert Low Bacon was in New York, "probably at this moment ringing door bells" during the final hours of Republican campaigning for the State's senatorial election, explained Mrs. Quayle.

Mrs. Anderson Says 'Thanks'

PUNISHING criminals isn't the only important function of our modern prisons. They also help restore self-respect and self-reliance to the offender and prepare him for a new role in society.

This was explained to the National Democratic Women's Club yesterday by James V. Bennett, director of the Bureau of Prisons.

The club also heard a brief impromptu talk by the new United States Ambassador to Denmark, Mrs. Eugenie Anderson.

Mrs. Anderson, who came to the luncheon meeting as a guest of Mrs. Charles F. Brannan, wife of the Secretary of Agriculture, expressed her deep gratitude for the telegrams and letters of congratulation from women all over the country.

Our Economy-Minded Army Uses Up Old Parachutes To Make GIs Look Chic

By Mary Van Rensselaer Thayer

SINCE ladies as well as gents pay taxes and, what's more, the female sex has quite a bit to do with supplying the Nation with soldiers, it's doubly interesting for us to find out where our defense dollar goes.

Down at Fort Benning, Ga., during the Army phase of the Fifth Joint Civilian Orientation Conference, some fascinating figures were assembled. After 9500 soldiers of the Third Infantry Division had passed in early morning review before Secretary of the Army Gordon Gray and Endicott R. Lovell, representative of the civilian invitees, the guests inspected an exhibition of organization and individual equipment. Everything an Infantry Division uses, from a Tank-Carrier which costs around $40,000 to a set of GI buttons, was precisely arranged and price tagged.

Here's the initial setup cost of an infantry division of 1007 officers and 17,799 men: Organization Equipment, $74,310,123; Individual Equipment and Clothing $5,188,181—a total of $79,498,304! And here's the peacetime daily cost of maintaining an Infantry Division: Pay and allowances, $83,823; Rations, $16,768; Equipment and Replacement, $18,669—a daily total of $119,260.

What the Infantry Needs

YOU'D never guess some of the things an infantry division needs! For instance, there's a small matter of M-24 Tanks, some 123 of them, which set the Government back $10,002,852. Among the many unusual items there's the Chaplain's equipment which comes to $1571; four water purifiers totaling $6760; motorized shop equipment at $23,572; a crane at $18,500 with three of them to a division; a single radio truck and signal equipment at $110,498 which is only a fraction of the signal equipment necessary; a mobile field bath unit at $2898 (four of them needed to keep the GIs dainty); 19 first aid stations coming to a total of $113,240.95. All this without mentioning arms of any kind or a million dollars worth of jeeps. The most expensive lethal weapon is the 75-mm coilless rifle which costs a cool $1876, though fortunately there are only 39 in the division. And so it goes, the terrific cost of keeping us safe.

From the fashion point of view, today's infantryman looks very chic, indeed. He wears long trousers stuffed into above-ankle length boots, a dark green helmet liner and a variety of colored silk ascot scarves: green for the anti-tank men, light blue for the infantry, buff for the quartermaster corps, a sort of fuschia for the medical men and so on.

This last snappy touch actually costs very little since the scarves are made from old parachutes. They have some trouble with the dyeing job, the quartermasters—who try to match their scarves to their buff-colored guidons—coming out with caramel colored silk.

Another economy we discovered is made when official salutes are given. After learning that some shells cost from $15 to $20 each, we set to work calculating how much the 19-gun salute to the economy-minded Secretary of Defense came to. In the midst of our figuring, information was rushed to us, disclosing that official salutes are made from retrieved cartridge cases—and presumably stale, but usable, powder! So possibly the arrival of a lot of brass at any given point sets the taxpayer back—only a few bucks!

Air Display Highlight

HIGHLIGHT of the Joint Civilian Orientation Conference, from the purely personal and feminine point of view, was the airborne display.

Four troop-carrying gliders, towed by two planes, dropped their tow lines and circled down to the field, gliding to a stop near the grandstand in perfect alignment. Within the second, the doors snapped open and the airborne troops leaping out into formation all on the run. The real battle was staged on Helmet Trail (a firing range far outside Fort Benning).

Most exciting features were: The rocket-bomb dropping by 12 Thunderjet F84Es in which the planes perfectly synchronized, swooped on a hilly target, their rocket bombs streaming scarlet ribbons in front—not back—and, since the planes are jet-propelled, executing the maneuver practically in silence . . . the speed with which the largest tanks tore across bumpy country, racing with guns bobbing and throwing up clouds of dust . . . the ear-splitting boom of the 4.2 howitzers wanged from behind the bleachers . . . and finally, the really exceptional doughnuts and excellent coffee served in between demonstrations!

About Cutting Down Shirts

Because I am sure there are many other mothers of girl teen-agers who would like to know this, I am asking you to publish the name and number of a pattern for a blouse which can be made from a man's shirt.
Mother of a Teen-Age Girl

Either McCall's pattern Number 7277 or 6709 could be used to make a blouse from a man's shirt. Both patterns are for tailored blouses which open down the front. When cutting, cut the blouse pieces from the corresponding shirt pieces—sleeves from sleeves, back from back, etc. Leave the shirt pocket as it is and just open the under-arm sleeve. The front of the shirt is wide enough so that you can cut the button and button-hole bands off in order to put the buttons on the opposite side which is the correct side for a girl.

The extra length in the shirt tail can be used for the front facings and the collar can be cut from the lower part of the sleeve if you make the blouse short sleeved. You may need to piece the collar in the middle of the back.

Is there a product that could be used to seal the leaks in a baby's bathinette, and perhaps also used to apply another coat to a waterproof mattress? If so, where can it be purchased?
J. C. B.

Rubber cement can be used to close small holes in a bathinette. Wipe the surface well with varsol or spot remover to remove surface oil before applying the cement. Larger holes can sometimes be sealed with tire patches. If the holes are too numerous to be closed with either of the above methods, the only remaining solution is to replace the rubber part of the tub. Replacement kits, which include new rubber with directions for attaching it to the old frame, can be purchased where new bathinettes are sold.

I'm sorry, I know of no product which can be applied to the surface of a mattress to waterproof it.

I want to make bassinet and crib sheets out of some old large sheets. Would cutting them to size with pinking shears be satisfactory, without hemming? What is a standard crib size sheet?
A READER.

Because a pinked edge tears more quickly than a hemmed edge, I would advise hemming the sheets. This would be especially true in using old material for crib sheets because, as you know, old fabric tears much more readily than new. The standard size crib sheet is 45 by 71 inches.

Please tell me where I can get instructions on how to make "pull cord" drapes. J. J. P.

A nationally known sewing machine company which operates sewing centers over the city sells a booklet for 25 cents called "Home Decoration Guide." In this booklet you will find complete directions for making drapes of every sort, including pull drapes. If you sew, there are probably enough directions and illustrations in the book to give you all the help you need. If, however, you find after you get started that you can't do it by yourself, there are instructors at the sewing center where you bought your book who will help you. You could take a complete 10-lesson course in making drapes, slip covers, and so forth, from them, or you could find out what you need to know on an individual lesson basis.

We must store a number of books in a fairly well ventilated attic for a year or so. How should they be packed to protect them?
A READER.

Pack the books in sturdy, paper-lined boxes with paper between the volumes to protect the covers. When the boxes are full, place a layer of papers on top of the books and sprinkle the top generously with 10 percent DDT power or sodium fluoride to guard against silverfish. Close the box tightly to keep out dust.

Is there a place in Washington that will put fringe on a chair? We purchased a sofa and chair with fringe around the bottom. Now we have another chair and would like it to match.
C. A. T.

One of the firms listed under "Upholsterers" in the yellow pages of the telephone book can put the fringe on the chair.

I have a married friend living in a small town in Indiana with a family of small children. Her husband is not in good health and at no time is able to earn a good salary. I would like to give her a "lift," but am very hesitant to send money as I do not want her to feel obligated, or an object of charity.

Is there some channel through which I could send a box of staple groceries, without her being aware of the donor? Or, could you give me a suggestion of how I could send something without her knowing the source?
F. L. M.

If your friend is a member of a church in her town, you may be able to work anonymously through her minister to give her the box of groceries. Or, you could write to one of the businessmen's organizations in the town such as Rotary or Kiwanis and ask them to recommend to you a grocer who could be depended upon to keep your secret and through whom you could order the groceries delivered. Chances are that such a man will be in the club's membership, so the letter will have to pass through a minimum of hands.

However, there is a question in my mind as to whether your friend will feel more an object of charity if the groceries are delivered anonymously than if she was to be told you sent them. If they came anonymously she might think her plight was so obvious to her community that some established charitable organization had come to her aid.

On the other hand, if she recognizes you as a true friend, who at the moment is possessed of more of the world's goods than she happens to be, your gift would be considered a thoughtful gesture for which she would feel only gratitude. If you should decide to tell your friend you are the donor, make it clear that the knowledge is shared only by you two—and see that that is actually the case.

Would you please give me the address of a radio program called "Talk Out of It"?
A READER.

There is a radio program called "Talk Your Way Out of It" which is carried Monday, Wednesday and Friday from 3 to 3:30 p. m. over the American Broadcasting network. The Washington outlet of that network is Station WMAL. The program originates in New York City.

SAFE Cuts Cost Of Food Parcel

Food packages prepared by the "Save a Friend in Europe" organization are now available at a 10 percent reduction. Announcement of the new price, $9 for a parcel was made by Mrs. Ruth Greenwood, Washington director of SAFE, which is part of the nonprofit Swiss charity, Caritas.

The recent devaluation of foreign currency is responsible for the new prices, according to SAFE, since food for these packages is purchased and packed abroad. Danish food, paid for in krone, is stockpiled in 94 depots in England, Austria, and all zones of Germany.

This system also builds dollar credits for Marshall Plan nations, Mrs. Greenwood pointed out.

Special English self-choice parcels containing food delicacies which the English government allows for export only, are purchaseable by United States donors for English families through SAFE.

Suspect Skips, Leaves Police His Address

James B. Bailey made the mistake of leaving his coat and identification cards, as well as a bag of lunch, when he ran from police early yesterday. As a result, police said, he is under arrest on housebreaking and grand larceny charges.

Metropolitan Police Pvt. Charles W. Chaillet of the Ninth Precinct said he spotted a man in a vacant lot early yesterday, apparently opening a box. He and Charles Hudson, a Pennsylvania Railroad officer, who was with him, also noticed an open boxcar in the nearby Ivy City railroad yards.

They shouted and the man ran, finally climbed a fence into Mount Olivet Cemetery. Though he left a part of his shirt and blood from hand cuts on the fence, he escaped in the darkness. The officers fired five shots to no avail.

Returning to the vacant lot, near 16th and Oakie sts. ne., the officers found a case of wine and two cases of brandy which they said had been removed from the freight car. They also found the coat, identification cards and lunch.

At 7 a. m. yesterday, when Bailey reported for work at a brickyard, he was arrested. He is 47 and said he lives at 145 S st. nw. U. S. Commissioner C. S. Lawrence held him under $1000 bond and continued the case to Wednesday.

The Lyon's Den

By Leonard Lyons

NEW YORK.—When the Shirley Temple-John Agar separation announcement was made, some Hollywood columnists immediately suggested that Johnny Johnston, the singer, was involved. Johnston is married to Kathryn Grayson, the MGM actress, and they were curious about how such a story could be spread. They discussed all possible sources and motives, and their suspicion finally settled on one of their friends. Miss Grayson decided to make her own test . . . When the suspected source called at the Johnston house Miss Grayson told him: "Well, I'm having a baby." That night three columnists phoned her to check on the baby-item.

Classes for Prospective Dads

By Dr. Ernest G. Osborne

Classes for expectant fathers! These are something new under the sun! In a few of our larger cities, today, you'll find a group of young men gathered together, eagerly looking at charts showing the yet-unborn baby, practicing bathing a life-size baby doll or discussing the way their wives are acting during the last months of pregnancy.

Such groups are usually under the auspices of a public health nursing service or a maternity center organization. Understanding nurses or doctors lead the discussions, answer questions and present pertient facts.

Men who have gone through such a prepaternal "course of sprouts" report that they don't worry as much about the dangers of childbirth, that they appreciate having enough understanding so that they can discuss the coming of the baby with their wives intelligently and that they have much more of a feeling of being a part of the whole process.

If your community never has heard of such a thing as a class for expectant dads, perhaps one can be stirred up. Modern young doctors, the public health nursing group or other competent people might be persuaded to experiment a little. Not all dads-to-be will want to come, but there'll be a good many who do.

What's the Verdict?

Helping Hand

Q. Doakes became attracted to Joe, the small son of a poor neighboring family. He bought clothes for him and helped him with school money. When the boy was 12, Doakes persuaded Joe's family to let Joe live with him and help with the chores. He promised Joe that he would finance him in agricultural school if Joe would promise to manage the farm afterward. He then took out a $10,000 insurance policy on Joe, who died the next year. May he collect the insurance?

A. Doakes had a genuine material interest in the boy's continued life—the prospect of someone to manage his farm in later years. Even though Doakes never could enforce such a contract against the boy, it nevertheless constituted a material interest that would be insurable, if approved by the boy's parents. It would be too late for the insurance company to raise the question of insurable interest after the boy's death, when it could properly have made inquiry about the relationship before issuing the policy.

Court House

The court house is a gloomy place . . . Where criminals are tried . . . And every lawyer tries to get . . . The jury on his side . . . Where judges rule with dignity . . . And bailiffs keep the peace . . . While clerks record the cost of each . . . Conviction or release . . . The court house is a picture show . . . Of fascinating sights . . . Where people stare at others who . . . Demand their common rights . . . Where damages are figured up . . . And contracts are enforced . . . And married couples separate . . . Or get themselves divorced . . . It is the hall of justice in . . . A land where all are free . . . And every law is one that strives . . . For full equality.

THE DISTRICT LINE by Bill Gold

It Won't Wind Up in the Dead Letter Office

Liz Werres, attending St. Mary's College at Holy Cross, Indiana, needs help in answering a question from her schoolmates.

They want to know whether the address of the White House is really 1600 Pennsylvania ave. nw., or is it some obscure number on the Ellipse?

Pictures of the Executive Mansion don't agree on which is "the front door," and the gals want an explanation.

The answer they give me, Liz, is that in the old days the Ellipse side was considered the front door. But then Washington grew up around the White House to the point that it was more convenient to use the Pennsylvania ave. side to enter and leave—so that has now taken over as "the front door."

Either way, I don't think the Postoffice Department will have any trouble figuring out to which White House you want your letter delivered.

PUN FUN

Mrs. Donald Shook of 6403 Oakridge ave., Chevy Chase, Md., tells me that the first thing she does when she gets up in the morning is reach for her favorite newspaper. As she puts it:

"You might say I go from pillow to Post."

SILVER LINING

The one nice thing about a toothache is that it certainly makes you forget all your other troubles.

MISCELLANY

A king-sized hurrah for Pvt. William McMahon and his colleagues at No. 8 Precinct is at hand from Lorania K. Francis of the Washington bureau of the Los Angeles Times. Ricky, the Francis fox terrier, took French leave for a day, and the boys at No. 8 were courteous and helpful in the ensuing search . . . Louise H. Puleo of 1312 Tuckerman st. nw., whose brother, Johnny, plays with the Harmonica Rascals, got a big thrill out of word that the Rascals had again given a command performance before Britain's Royal Family on Monday . . . James B. Mann of 3132 Martha Custis dr., Alexandria, Va., has high praise for his Washington Post carrier boy, Pete Miller. Says Subscriber Mann: "He's very polite and courteous, and I predict he'll go places, because he's up and doing before others are out of bed" . . . The District Commissioners have designated this to be "Hadassah Day," and 300 volunteers will be ringing doorbells in a membership drive based on the slogan: "Join Hadassah and help the world's youngest Democracy, Israel" . . . The Good Samaritan Society of Washington is working on a project to collect wash cloths, towels, powdered milk, winter clothing and other essentials to make this a happier Christmas for 204 orphaned Japanese children. Anybody who'd like to lend a hand can contact Mrs. Julia Judge of 2410 Wagner st. se. on Axminster 7600. (Yep—she's the same Mrs. Judge who has worked so hard for Catholic and other charities, and whose radio appeal raised tons of soap for hospitals and orphanages overseas) . . . You hear all sorts of alibis from people who are late for work, but Mrs. Herbert H. Lawhorn of 6309 Georgia st., Chevy Chase, Md., overheard a new one on a streetcar the other day. The woman in front of her told a companion: "It's my dog's fault I overslept. He didn't start barking at 6 o'clock, the way he usually does."

GIVE-AWAYS

"Playful, beautifully marked 3-month-old tiger kitten." (Randolph 4875.)

"Housebroken, unusually affectionate, prettily striped kitten." (Lockwood 5-0036, evenings.)

"Very affectionate blonde cocker pup, 3 months old; not pedigreed; she needs a yard and children." (Rockville 3547, after 6 p. m.)

"Nice 5-month-old puppy needs a country home; we're moving to smaller quarters." (Adams 0187.)

"Half-Siamese kitten, black; interesting pet." (Oliver 7691.)

"Lovely black-and-white cat and her three 10-week-old male kittens." (Emerson 5052.)

PERSONAL NOTES

Marie Koch: Bucky Harris says he went to school in Pittston, Pa., so the fellow in Arkansas must have been some other Harris.

LAST CALL

This is the last day for casting your "vote" for or against the continued use of Give-Away items in this column. All letters and postcards on the subject must be postmarked today in order to count.

POWER OF ADVERTISING

Mrs. George M. Dove of 3503 Jefferson st., Hyattsville, Md., confides that she can't listen to the "Grand Canyon Suite" without expecting somebody to call out: "Call for Phil-lip Mawriss . . ."

LABOR SAVING DEVICE

Mrs. P. Yahr of Beltsville, Md., is enthusiastic about the suggestion that the phone company invent a gadget which shows when a party line is in use.

"It would save so much time," she points out. "Instead of lifting the receiver many times a day to find out what's going on, if anything, we could just wait for the gadget to light up—and then we'd never miss a word."

GRRRR!

Of all the mail I get each day,
There's one kind makes me mad:
The kind from Joe Anonymous
That starts: "Dear Sir, You Cad."

Lewis Eager For Peace to Quell Revolt

By Drew Pearson

Inside reason why John L. Lewis is trying so desperately to settle with the coal operators is that his United Mine Workers Union is torn with rank-and-file revolt.

Lewis

Many coal miners deeply resented Lewis' offer to contribute funds to CIO Steelworkers from the UMW treasury at a time when the miners themselves are destitute and hungry. Also, there is widespread rank-and-file bitterness over Lewis' dissipation of the miners' pension and welfare fund.

The rebellion against Lewis is strongest in Virginia and West Virginia, where several local mine unions have voted by secret ballot to go back to work. However, the operators refused to reopen, fearing possible violence and bloodshed by Lewis strong-arm squads.

Other miners, rather than have their families go hungry in the prolonged strike, have actually gone to work in nonunion mines in Virginia and western Kentucky.

Row Over China

The hottest diplomatic row between the United States and Great Britain in recent years is taking place backstage over the touchy subject of China.

President Truman and Secretary Acheson got wind of the fact that a large British diplomatic delegation has been secretly conferring in Pieping with the Chinese Communists in order to negotiate British recognition of the Red government. This is a direct violation of the Bevin-Acheson agreement made in New York a month ago in which both agreed that no deals would be made with the Chinese Reds without first consulting each other, together with France, Holland and Belgium.

When the State Department learned that this agreement had been violated, Secretary Acheson and the other foreign ministers sent a scorching joint note secretly to British Foreign Minister Bevin denouncing his government for trafficking with the Chinese Reds.

Bevin, replying, admitted his country's guilt, but brazenly stated that the move was necessary. However, Britain, he condescended to say, would keep its allies informed of its activities from here on in.

Acheson and Truman are still boiling.

Fraternalism

Southern race disturbances or KKK floggings make sensational headlines, while the little acts of kindness between white and colored people seldom get in the newspapers.

In Florence, South Carolina, for instance, a Negro Western Union messenger, James E. Jones, has spent his extra time and energy in recent years collecting money for the March of Dimes. James Jones has been so energetic and so devoted that he has won the admiration of all citizens in his community and last year this columnist nominated him as a servant of brotherhood.

The other day, however, the man who had been helping others, himself was taken sick. He was sent to the hospital with a complication of various ailments, leaving a wife and seven children without funds.

Promptly the white citizens of Florence started a campaign to help him. Last January, Jones collected $2576 to help the March of Dimes. Now his friends are trying to top this mark to help him.

GOP Cupboard Bare

National Chairman Guy Gabrielson has fired 25 employes off the payroll of the Republican National Committee in an effort to put the committee on a pay-as-you-go basis. He will fire still more later.

Gabrielson found GOP finances in a terrible state when he recently took over. Former National Chairman Hugh Scott had been spending at the rate of $70,000 a month for payroll and other expenses, while practically no money was coming in from the big-money boys.

The national committee had $800,000 in the bank last January. When Gabrielson took over in September he found, to his amazement, that just over $100,000 was left in the treasury.
